PREFACE.

FIFTY-TWO years ago, Dr. MORRISON ended his labors on his Chinese Dictionary with the sentence, "Thanks to Heaven's gracious Providence, Canton, April 9, 1822," as the expression of his thankfulness that he had been enabled to bring the seven years' toil to a close; and in his own copy, presented to me in 1834 by his son John, he had written underneath it, "Glory be to God on high, Nov. 12, 1828; R.M."—as if the recollection of the day on which the first sentence was printed, had only deepened the satisfaction he felt after six years at having seen it through the press. That work will ever remain a monument of his industry and scholarship; and its publication in six quarto volumes by the East India Company at an outlay of $60,000 was a just appreciation of its merits.

Since then, many similar works have been published, dictionaries both of the general language and its chief dialects; but their editions were small, and during a course of years they have either become exhausted, or are very scarce, while the number of students has increased tenfold. Thus the works of MEDHURST, BRIDGMAN, CALLERY, and GONÇALVES, are now almost unknown; and the only lexicons available for the use of Chinese students have been the reprint of MORRISON'S Syllabic Dictionary, MACLAY'S Fuhchau, DOUGLAS' Amoy, and LOBSCHEID'S Canton, Vernacular Dictionaries.

These considerations led me to regard the preparation of a Dictionary on the syllabic plan, as the way in which I could best facilitate the study of the language. My first plan was to reärrange my Tonic Dictionary of the Canton Dialect, and fit it for general use; but I soon saw that its incompleteness required an entire revision. I accordingly commenced in 1863, and took the Wu-fang Yuen Yin as the basis for arranging the characters, instead of following MORRISON, to whom this vocabulary seems to have been unknown. It was easier and safer to adopt a native arrangement of the syllables, than to undertake to make a new one as he had done, and this Dictionary, therefore, follows that work almost exactly. Though its pronunciation differs probably from that heard at any one place where the kwan hwa is spoken, it is probably nearer to the general average of the spoken language, as heard north of the Yang-tsz' River, than it would have been to reduce it to the speech of a single city or prefecture, as Peking for instance. In a work intended for general use, this approximation is better in one point, that it allows every student to mark the variations from this standard as heard in his own region; moreover, it is what the natives themselves look for in their own dictionaries. We can hardly expect anything nearer than this general approach to a uniform pronunciation of Chinese.

I have consulted all the works of my predecessors which I could get, and have examined each character in MORRISON'S Syllabic Part, in GONÇALVES' Diccionario China-Portuguez, in DE GUIGNES' Dictionnaire Chinois, and in my Canton Dictionary. Dr. MEDHURST'S translation of the K'anghi Tsz'tien has been much used, but the principal source for definitions has been its original, which, imperfect as it is according to our ideas of a lexicon, is still the most convenient work of the kind in the language. The etymological definitions are drawn from the Selected Characters Carefully Examined 埶文備覽, a dictionary published in 1787, and furnishing good definitions of all the common characters, whose ancient forms are explained.

The end aimed at has been to give the meanings of a word, and to illustrate them with phrases, adding the colloquial uses where they could be ascertained. The limited extent to which I have carried this part, has only served to show more strikingly how much there is still to do, and how many collaborators are needed to do it effectually. When local dictionaries of the leading dialects have been published like those issued in the Canton, Amoy, and Fuhchau dialects, it will be possible to compare the local usages of characters, and learn their differences from the authorized definitions. Many expressions now regarded as unwritten will probably then be found to have once had proper characters since forgotten.

In such a comparison of dialects the natives have done nothing; for few or none of the colloquial meanings are given in the local dictionaries of those three cities, though one would have supposed that their principal object and benefit would be to illustrate the local usages of words. The literati, however, despise all such inroads upon classical usage, and except in the kwan hwa, the colloquial has never received their attention. This is not to be wondered at, and probably it has been the only way to maintain the purity, if not the sense, of the written character and language; for confusion would soon arise by using local characters instead of authorized ones. When the knowledge of books increases, and men can rapidly pass and repass across the country, the kwan hwa will, perhaps, become more uniformly and widely used, and the local dialects, like those once current in parts of England and France, gradually give way to it; or else, the wider diffusion of knowledge will compel the people speaking one dialect to reduce it to an alphabetic form, discard the complex characters, and crystallize their speech into a separate tongue.

Mr. MARSH says the distinction between the written and spoken languages in Europe was once far greater than at present, and has diminished as education has advanced:—

"It is difficult for Englishmen and Anglo-Americans, who habitually speak much as they write, and write much as they speak, to conceive of the co-existence of two dialects in a people, one almost uniformly employed in conversation, the other almost as exclusively in writing. Yet such was the state of things in England, from the Conquest at least till the middle of the XIVth century, and such is the case in a large part of Europe at this day. In Italy, for instance, there is almost everywhere a popular speech, commonly employed by all classes in familiar oral intercourse, and so far cultivated that it can be, though it rarely is, written; while, at the same time, the lingua commune d'Italia, or, as it is often called, the Tuscan dialect, is known to all as the language of books, of journals, and of correspondence, and is also employed as the medium of religious and scholastic instruction. But this literary tongue, at least in those parts of Italy where dialects widely different from it are habitually spoken, always remains to the Italians themselves essentially a foreign language. This fact BIONDELLI states in stronger terms than a prudent stranger would venture to do upon the testimony of his own observation, in his Saggio sui Dialetti Gallo-Italici, X.

"There is a similar discrepancy between the written and spoken language in many parts of Germany, though the diffusion of literary culture in that country has made the dialect of books more universally familiar than in most European nations. The oriental traveler SEETZEN, whose journals have lately been published, sometimes makes entries in them in the Platt-Deutsch of his native province, and states expressly that he uses that dialect, in order that those passages may not be understood by strangers, into whose hands his papers might chance to fall."—G. P. MARSH, Early Literature of the English Language, page 337.

If these differences still remain in those civilized countries, much more are they seen among the half-educated people of Asia, where the literary classes have tried rather to encumber the road to knowledge than to help the student over its difficulties; who is compelled, as it were, to waste most of his energy in sharpening his ax before he can cut down the tree.

The plan of a Chinese lexicon to satisfy all the needs of a foreigner, should comprise the general and vernacular pronunciations, with the tones used in various places, and the sounds given to each character as its meanings vary. The history and composition of the character, its uses in various epochs, and its authorized and colloquial meanings should be explained and illustrated by suitable examples. All this knowledge should be methodically arranged so as to be accessible with the least possible trouble. But even when arranged and ready, the foreigner would find it to be incomplete for all his purposes by reason of the local usages, as another extract from Mr. MARSH shows:—

"I may here notice a widely-diffused error, which it may be hoped the lexicographical criticism of the present day may dispel. I refer to the opinion that words, individually and irrespectively of syntactical relations, and combinations in phrases, have one or more inherent, fixed, and limited meanings, which are capable of logical definition, and of expression in other descriptive terms of the same language. This may be true of artificial words—that is, words invented for, or confined to the expression of arbitrary distinctions and technical notions in science or its practical applications, and also of the names of material objects and of the sensuous qualities of things; but of the vocabulary of the passions and the affections, which grows up and is informed with living meaning by the natural, involuntary processes to which all language but that of art owes its being, it is wholly untrue. Such words live and breathe only in mutual combination and interdependence with other words. They change their force with every new relation into which they enter; and consequently, their meanings are as various and exhaustless as the permutations and combinations of the ten digits. To teach, therefore, the meaning of a great proportion of the words which compose the vocabulary of every living speech, by formal definition, is as impossible as to convey by description a notion of the shifting hues of the pigeon's neck."—Second Course, page 383.

If this be true of English or German, it is still more applicable to the Chinese language, whose painstaking students have quoted a vast number of phrases in their two great lexicons, viz., the Treasury of Good Sentences 佩文韻府 in 110 volumes, and the Classification of Dissyllables 駢字類編 in 120 volumes. In these their aim has been to show the different uses of the same word, but the variety of material bewilders the student, and he soon despairs of finding any connection between their meanings. But there are other difficulties in the way of making a complete Anglo-Chinese lexicon. There is, as a preliminary, the vast extent of the literature to become familiar with, which demands much and protracted study. Neither is it easy to find exact equivalents for single Chinese words in English; and to render their combinations into corresponding phrases requires long practice in writing and speaking. If concrete terms like 書, 筆, or 墨, are so unlike as to require some explanation when rendering them by book, pen, or ink; much more unlike are abstract terms like those relating to mental or religious exercises. This every one knows who has tried to teach our ideas of sin, righteousness, or salvation by 罪, 義, or 救, their nearest equivalents. Then again, the native scholars who help us are trained in a different school, and their ignorance, carelessness, and deceit have all to be guarded against. They do not like to appear ignorant before a foreigner on any subject, and are usually ready with an answer, whether to give the name of a flower, to render a distich, or to state the location of a town; trusting, perhaps, that their pupil will never inquire into the matter. In my own case, hundreds of questions could not be revised by cross-questioning others, and errors have probably crept in which will require more time to correct than it did to make them. The subjects to be explained comprise all branches of knowledge, too, some of which are not very familiar, and on this account, accuracy, which is the thing most wanted, is especially difficult of attainment. Added to this, the effort to find the meaning of a sentence originally written wrong, has not unfrequently perplexed both teacher and pupil. Chinese books are very rich in misprints and misuse of characters, and having no stops or punctuation, and no capital letters to denote proper names, a phrase is easily misread or misunderstood.

The early associations of the native with the language and its literature are wanting to the foreigner, and he often fails to relish an allusion because he is ignorant of the incident, or appreciate a metaphor, because he cannot tell what object is referred to. I have tried to ascertain as near as possible the names of natural objects, for which I have consulted the Chinese Herbal 本草綱目, the Book of Nature 三才圖, and the Names and Pictures of Vegetables, 植物名實圖考; but in religious, medical, legal, and mercantile terms, much remains to be done. The common uses of many words in all these departments are unlike in different parts of China; and this confusion can only be removed by further comparison. The book word for a flower or a disease often differs from the common name, which itself changes in remote parts of the country. We are not yet acquainted with the botany, zoölogy, mineralogy, or nosology of China well enough to recognize in the poor descriptions of native authors the objects of our inquiry. For instance, the jasmine is called 茉莉花 in Canton, but this name denotes the four-o'-clock in Peking; in one city the 木瓜 is the papaya, while in the other it is the quince. Again, the panda of Nipal (Ailurus refulgens) is probably intended by the 貔; but one would need to know well this animal's habitat and appearance to recognize it under the description of "a sprightly animal like a small bear, with short hair, but yellowish."

The misuse of words in passing from one dialect to another can be illustrated by the name given to the people of Swatow. This was hok-lò, 福佬 i.e. people from Fuhkien; but when the Cantonese heard hok-lò, they wrote it as they heard the sound, 學佬 being now the name given to the people of that prefecture, and the Cantonese of the present day puzzle themselves to know why it was applied to them. No Chinese scholar has examined these dialectical changes, which are an ample source of many colloquialisms in every dialect.

I have followed EITEL's Hand-book of Buddhism, F. P. SMITH's Materia Medica, and HOBSON's Medical Vocabulary, for terms in those branches. Mr. WADE's Category of T'ien and his Course of Colloquial Chinese, EDKINS' Grammar of the Shanghai Dialect and his Progressive Lessons in the Chinese Spoken Language, MACLAY and BALDWIN's Dictionary of the Foochow Dialect, LEGGE's Translation of the Chinese Classics, and BRIDGMAN's Chrestomathy, have all furnished their quotas. I have not, however, mentioned my authorities in the body of the work, lest I should cumber it. The examples and phrases number about 53,000, and are not repeated when it could be avoided; nor is their pronunciation added, for as the work is intended for students in all the dialects, each will read them in the one he is learning. A space is left under each character, if one wishes to write the local sound beside the Pekingese, which has been carefully revised by Rev. CHAUNCEY GOODRICH. The colloquial use of a character is placed by itself. MACLAY's Dictionary is the authority for the few given in the Fuhchau dialect, and my Canton Dictionary for that dialect. For the Shanghai dialect, I am indebted to Miss LYDIA M. FAY, of the American Episcopal Mission; and also for the Shanghai sounds given in the Index, and — what involved far more work, — a careful oversight of the manuscript before it went into the printer's hands. The Amoy sounds in the Index were furnished by Rev. W. S. SWANSON and Rev. W. MCGREGOR. The long list of surnames owes most of its accuracy and extent to Rev. Dr. BLODGET of Peking; and the careful revision of the proof-sheets of the Introduction and Index by Mr. A. WYLIE has contributed everything to their accuracy. Other friends have aided in whatever way they could, by whom during the progress of the work many points have been cleared up.

The number of characters in this work is 12,527, contained in 10,940 articles, and placed under 522 syllables, which follow each other alphabetically, aspirated syllables coming after the unaspirated. Those syllables which begin with ts, on account of their number, are placed by themselves after tw'an. When a character is described as unauthorized, it merely means that it does not occur in K'anghi, for several of those thus designated are in good use. The edition of the Wu-fang Yuen Yin, which I have followed, has 10,486 characters, including scores of duplicates; but the full edition contains 41,247 words, or nearly as many as are in K'anghi's Dictionary. I have brought together all the sounds and meanings of a word under its most common sound, in order to avoid repeating the character. The characters in MORRISON's Dictionary are arranged under 411 syllables, (not distinguishing between aspirated and unaspirated sounds,) and their total number, including hundreds of duplicates, is 12,674. In DE GUIGNES' Dictionary there are 13,933, of which 1040 are duplicated forms; in the Canton Dictionary, 7850; in the Fuhchau Dictionary, 9390; and in GONÇALVES, 7670.

The tables scattered through the book will serve to elucidate many points occurring in the course of study, and save reference to other works. They are placed as follows:—

The Introduction is designed to furnish some explanations respecting the scope of the work, the orthography employed, the construction of characters, and such hints and helps in commencing the study of the language as practice has proved to be useful. Those paragraphs respecting the affinities between the general spoken language and the south-eastern dialects, are short and imperfect compared with the subject, but may lead to something fuller. The whole subject of comparison of dialects has not been worked out, because there are not sufficient data on which to found either reasoning or deductions. The short lists of dialectical sounds prefixed to each syllable, may furnish starting points to students at various parts, to mark the local differences from the Wu-fang Yuen Yin.

In concluding these remarks, I have the satisfaction of feeling that the labor spent upon this work during the past eleven years, in the intervals of official duties, will now be available for students in acquiring the Chinese language. Its deficiencies will be hereafter supplied by others who will build upon their predecessors as I have done; for the field is too vast to be explored or exhausted by even many laborers. The stimulus to past effort, and the hope that it would not be in vain, both sprang from the desire to aid the labors of those who are imparting truth in any branch to the sons of Han, especially those religious and scientific truths whose acquisition and practice can alone Christianize and elevate them. At the end of the forty years spent in this country in these pursuits, I humbly thank the good Lord for all the progress I have been permitted to see in this direction, and implore His blessing upon this effort to aid their greater extension.

UNITED STATES LEGATION,

Peking, June, 1874. S. W. W.

INTRODUCTION.

SECT. I. —THE MANDARIN DIALECT AS EXHIBITED IN THE WU-FANG YUEN YIN.

The speech of the great body of the educated classes among the Chinese, called by them the kwan hwa 官話 or Official Language, and known as the Court or Mandarin Dialect, is spoken throughout the regions north of the Yangtsz' River, without much variation in its idiom and grammatical construction, and very extensively in the provinces south of it, except in Fuhkien and Kwang-tung, to such a degree as to make it the prevailing speech in sixteen of the provinces. In most parts of the two above-named provinces, the vernacular presents so many variations from it in those two respects, that educated men are obliged to specially learn to speak the kwan hwa, in addition to the general study of the characters, in order to carry on oral intercourse with their educated countrymen at the north. This peculiarity of the Chinese language,—that of having many sounds for the same symbol, like the different names of the Arabic numerals among European nations, probably at first attached also to the Egyptian symbols; but the phonetic element there triumphed at last over the symbolic, and the Egyptian became finally an alphabetic language. Not so with the Chinese written language; this still maintains its ideographic character, and is now used as the written medium for the intercourse of more human beings than any other. The forms and significations of the symbols, too, have altered so slightly that inscriptions a thousand years old are read without difficulty, and books written thirty centuries ago are daily quoted as good authority both for style and for precept.

It is not surprising, perhaps, that such an ideographic language as this was invented; for the first thought of one who tries to write an idea, is more likely to be to picture it than to attempt to express the sounds by which it is spoken. The greater wonder is that it should have lasted so long, and exerted such an influence in perpetuating and unifying the people who use it. Nations who wrote in alphabetic languages were, it may be, not near enough, or civilized enough, to influence the very early Chinese, so as to fairly place the question before them of adopting an alphabetic language instead of their own; but after the introduction of Budhism, and the extension of the Imperial power of Han as far west as the Caspian Sea, this point must have presented itself to many minds. But no trace can be found of any serious effort on the part of native Chinese, to discard the characters and reduce their own speech to an alphabetic form in Devanagari, Persian, or any other character. In the ages succeeding the introduction of Budhism down to the present, this symbolic language has maintained itself intact. This is owing, more than any other one cause, to the difficulty that minds, long trained to associate ideas with separate pictorial symbols, find in associating them with combined symbols or letters, expressing only sounds. Educated Chinese are ready to acknowledge that other nations can write down their speech by letters, and understand it perfectly; but they have been trained so thoroughly to trust chiefly to the eye, to obtain the full meaning of an expression, that nothing else will serve. The laconism and energy of their written language over their spoken, tends too to confirm them in this habit, and prevent a fair trial of an easier mode of conveying thought. To a true disciple of Confucius, the notion that his teachings can be conveyed in any other form than the very characters he wrote them in, is almost preposterous;—it is stronger than the feeling among Mohammedans that Arabic is the only language fit for the Koran, and has more to support it. But in these days, this question will come to the front with increased power; and the difficulty of using such a cumborous medium to introduce new ideas on every subject, among millions of ignorant people, will force a solution. At present, their language seems to be the greatest intellectual obstacle to the advancement of the Chinese; but naturally, they will not reject it until they themselves see the need of another and easier; and vital Christianity alone can furnish the stimulus, guide, and reward of such a change.

It is not designed here to enter into a disquisition on the many interesting points connected with the origin, construction, and modifications of these characters; or to discuss the inception and growth of the great variety of sounds now given to the same character in various parts of the land. The present object is to furnish the student with such explanations as will facilitate his use of this Dictionary, and aid his progress in acquiring the written and spoken language.

The Chinese have adopted three modes of arranging the characters in their dictionaries, each of which has its special advantages. These are, the natural method, in which words of a similar meaning are grouped under leading heads;—the analytic method, by which words are arranged under certain determinatives called keys or radicals;—and the syllabic or rhyming method, by which words fall into certain classes according to their terminations.

Of the first kind, the 爾雅 or Ready Guide, is the best known, and first in age of philological works extant in any language. This ancient relic is usually ascribed to Cheu Kung, about B.C. 1100, but it was completed by Tsz'hia, a disciple of Confucius, nearly seven hundred years after; and remodeled into its present shape by Kwoh P'oh, about A.D. 280. It is still in constant use, and its quaint illustrations and archaic expressions illustrate both the ancient manners and language of the Chinese. It is divided into nineteen sections, some having several subdivisions, containing for the most part a natural arrangement of characters under the sixteen heads of kindred, houses, utensils, music, heaven, earth, mounds, hills, waters, plants, trees, insects, fishes, birds, and wild and domestic animals. These are preceded by a more strictly philological part in three sections, explaining ancient terms, words, and phrases. The first section gives the first, and almost the only attempt at a treatise on synonyms in the Chinese language, but it is too meager to be useful to the foreigner. For instance, the character 告 is defined by the following group of words, 命, 令, 禱, 祷, 祈, 請, 謁, 誥, and 誥, each of them in certain cases having the meaning of announcing, enjoining on, &c.; but there are no examples of their use. The work is now reckoned as the last of the Thirteen Classics.

It has had many imitations, which, though much modified, have generally assumed the form of encyclopedias of greater or less extent. One of the most useful of these classified dictionaries is the valuable 三才圖會 or Pictorial Book of Nature, published in the Ming Dynasty in 106 chapters; wherein various objects belonging to Heaven, Earth and Man, are treated of under sections like those in the Ready Guide, and every article has its own picture and explanatory letterpress. Useful as this class of books is to furnish materials for the lexicographer, the cumbersome arrangement forbids their general use as definers of characters.

The second, or analytic plan has grown out of the construction of the characters. When a writer wishes to express a new term, the genius of the language leads him to unite a symbol denoting sense, with another expressing sound rather than quality; though sound and quality are sometimes both attended to in the composition of the new symbol, the phonetic part not being used simply or altogether for its sound. It has also a signification of its own, and is sometimes so chosen that that shall furnish part of the idea to be conveyed by the new character; though this remark has many exceptions. For instance, in Pekingese, 鼻 the nose, joined to 囊 a bag, means the nose stopped up by a cold; it is read nang', in a different tone from nang, its primitive, but evidently alluding to it. As the number of characters increased, they were grouped by their natural or most prominent feature; thus the names of stones, birds, or armor, were ranged under the symbols 石, or 鳥, or 戈, these being common characters for those things already in use.

The earliest work on this principle is the 說文 or Discourse on Meaning of Words, published about A.D. 100, wherein the characters are arranged in 514 groups. They were rearranged by Ku Yé-wang of the Sui dynasty (A.D. 543), under 542 radicals; and again in the Sung dynasty by another writer under 544. In the Ming dynasty, the compiler of the 六書本義 or Origin of of the Six Modes of Writing, reduced them to 360; and about a century after, they were fixed at their present number of 214 in the 字彙 or Classification of Characters. This method of grouping characters, and arranging those placed under each radical by the number of their strokes, has proved to be so convenient, that no alteration has since been made in their order or number. It was adopted in the 正字通 or Explanations of Authorized Characters, the 康熙字典 or Emperor K'anghi's Dictionary, and the 款文備覽, or Selected Characters Carefully Examined, three of the most common dictionaries now in use.

The third, the syllabic or rhyming plan of arranging characters by their finals and tones, was adopted later than the analytic, but has been more extensively used. The confusion and diversity found amidst the works in each of these three classifications, prove the inherent difficulty of the attempt; but the readiness with which general and local rhyming vocabularies are made, proves too, their adaptability to meet a want, and the tendency of the language towards an alphabetic arrangement. The number of finals, at first 206 in the T'ang dynasty, was reduced to 160 in the Sung, and the initials were thirty-six. Subsequently these were rearranged and reduced by various authors, but all adhered to the mode of combining initials and finals brought from India by the Budhist priests Shăn-yoh 沈約 and Shăn-kung 神珙, during the Liang dynasty, A.D. 510. The 佩文韻府, probably the largest dictionary in any language of the world, is arranged on this rhyming principle, and all the local vocabularies.

It is very difficult for us, who are habituated to the use of letters, and their combinations into syllables to express the words in our Western languages, to appreciate the perplexities and difficulties of a Chinese scholar when he tries to represent the sounds and tones of his own language. In doing so, he can only employ other characters; but each one of these, too, having no inherent sound, perhaps, in its turn requires to be more accurately sounded, by comparing it with a third. To him the words 理 or 風 are indivisible simple sounds or names, as a or o are to us; but we describe them as li or fung — words of two or four letters. If an Englishman finds himself at fault in trying to read Spanish or Welsh correctly, because he pronounces the words according to his own letters;—and those people are still more perplexed, perhaps, when they try to read English according to their own letters, while all use a common alphabet to express elementary sounds;—how much more awkward does the Chinese philologist find it to express unknown syllables by known syllables. The plan now adopted is to express the sound by taking parts of two other words and combining them. For instance, the sound of 扮 is expressed by uniting 父 and 吻 to make 扮, i.e. f-u and w-ăn to make făn, or as we should express it, dropping two out of the five letters, and uniting the rest to form the new word. But as the sounds of all three characters may be unlike in different parts of the country, the next thing is to quote another character of the same sound, as 憤, to indicate this one. This difficulty of accurately exhibiting the sound is seen in the variety of characters quoted in K'anghi's Dictionary, which have been used by lexicographers to combine and express the sound of the characters they were defining; and this new sound, in its turn, is sometimes used to express the very sound of those characters used in writing its own. The following directions for the native student to find a character in the Wu-fang Yuen Yin will illustrate the dilemma both teacher and scholar feel in this respect, and in order to show it more clearly, only the tones are given, and not the pronunciation of the characters.

"Suppose a man wishes to find the character ㄑ方; he runs the word through the five tones, ㄑ方 ㄕ房, '倣 放', which as it has the same final with ㄑ央, ㄕ羊, '養, 樣', enables him to perceive that it is to be looked for under the ㄕ羊 final. Turning then to the table of initials, he sees that it belongs to the light-lip sounds (經 唇 音), and runs it over, saying ㄑ方, '倣, 放', 縛, ㄑ風, and ascertains that it comes under the initial ㄑ風. Now this character ㄑ風 as an initial, is known because it is derived from ㄑ江; by coalescing them in spelling, as ㄑ風 ㄑ江; we thus get ㄑ風, ㄑ分, ㄑ翻, ㄑ方, [all under the same initial, and the last one] ㄑ方 ㄕ房 '倣 放', 縛, has all the five tones complete. This is the warp (經) way, and it can also be called the lengthwise (縱) rule.

"But if one wishes a shorter way to find this same character [ㄑ方], let him run over the sounds ㄑ邦, ㄑ鎊, ㄑ牀, ㄑ方, ㄕ郎, and he will immediately perceive that it comes under the sound ㄕ羊, the fourth of the finals; looking there he will see it arranged among the characters under ㄑ風, the first one in the shang p'ing tone. This is the woof (緯) way, or it can also be called the cross-wise (橫) rule. This warp and woof way is certain, and there is no more convenient and direct manner of ascertaining the sounds of characters than by thus following them along and across. All other sounds can be ascertained in the same way."

It would be just as impossible for a Chinese, able only to speak his own language, to learn how to find a character from these directions if he desired to learn to read, as it would be for a foreigner who had just landed, and could not speak a word. Both of them must learn the sounds of the characters from a living voice; both must, so to speak, be introduced viva voce to the acquaintance and name of the character, as they would to the name of a visitor, or a row of flowers. The impossibility of writing foreign sounds with Chinese characters, so that native scholars can thereby read the words and study the books of other languages, is thus seen in its full difficulty; no doubt, it has had much to do with the isolation of this race, and the formation of their national character. The student in every other civilized nation can study foreign languages through his own; but however well a Chinese may read or speak the English language, for example, he cannot open its treasures to his countrymen by a grammar or praxis, so that one of them could, otherwise unaided, read or learn it. The Budhists tried to introduce the prayers of their religion from India to their fellow-disciples in China, using the Chinese characters; the result was only a rude transliteration of the Sanscrit sounds, to which the meanings were originally given; these sounds are still recited but their sense is mostly lost. It is safe to say that their symbolic language has shut out the people of this land from mental intercourse with their fellow-men more than any other one cause.

Foreigners have also arranged their dictionaries on three different plans. One is the analytic mode, under the 214 radicals, as has been done by De Guignes, Morrison, Medhurst, and Lobscheid; or according to an abridged series of radicals, as elaborated by Gonçalves. Another is the phonetic, adopted only by Callery in the Systema Phoneticum, in which he grouped characters by their primitives. The third is the syllabic, in which the characters follow one another alphabetically, as has been done by Morrison, Medhurst in his Hokkëen Dictionary, Maclay and Baldwin, Goddard, Douglas, and Williams.

It is the plan followed in the present work, and is on the whole the most useful to the foreign student, for it brings together homophonous characters, arranged in the order of their tones. Such are most frequently interchanged and mistaken by the people themselves, and those which a foreigner has most need of discriminating

He is certain in speaking, at first, to confound words of different tones, but written with the same letters, as ʿyen 烟 smoke; ʿyen 言 words; yen' 燕 a swallow, which are widely separated by their construction. A native also usually confuses characters having the same tone; and if all such are grouped together, their similarities and distinctions are more readily seen. Another advantage is the facility thereby afforded to the foreigner, who is learning the language with the help of a native teacher, to find the word he hears, which he knows not yet in its written form, or may not have had correctly given to him.

Further, the synonymous forms of the same character, which are sometimes alike as to their primitive, as 斯 and 斯 and 澌; or perhaps, more frequently occur under the same radical, as 瞬, 瞚, 瞤, 瞚, can, in the syllabic arrangement, all be seen at once. The addition of an index where every character is placed under its proper radical and stroke, furnishes all the aid required to find it, when the spelling is not known. The Chinese have never added a radical index to any of their syllabic dictionaries, for such a help would be quite useless, unless to indicate the page on which a character occurred. The native who wishes to examine the local vocabulary in another dialect must, therefore, first learn the system of initials and finals on which it is planned, or trust to a native of the locality where it is used.

The groundwork of the present Dictionary is the Wu-fang Yuen Yin 五方元音 or Original Sounds of the Five Regions, i.e. North, South, East, West and Center, which denote all the land. It is a vocabulary of the Court Dialect much used in Central and Northern China. It was first published in 1700, about the same date that the literati employed by K'anghi had finished the Thesaurus and Lexicon which reflect so much credit on his reign; and, perhaps, was suggested by the former of those works. The editions have been numerous and all exhibit slight variations in the arrangement of certain characters. An earlier work of the same sort had, however, appeared in the 13th century,—the 中原音韻 or Original Sounds and Finals in Chinese, in which the characters are arranged under nineteen finals; and it would have been better if the compiler of the present work had followed it in this respect. A third book, the 中州全韻 or Complete Finals for Central China, presents the characters arranged according to the several organs of the voice, as dental, lingual, palatal, guttural, &c.; but, as this system involves more attention to the initial than the others, it has not obtained so wide a circulation.

The definitions given in the Wu-fang Yuen Yin seldom consist of even a score of words; but this brevity was indispensable for the general usefulness of the manual, where only the principal meanings were needed. A translation of the preface of the edition of 1710 is here inserted; but it gives no information about the reasons for the work, or to what part of the empire it is applicable It is a fair sample of the style of prefaces to Chinese books, wherein one looks in vain for information or practical directions.

PREFACE TO THE EDITION OF 1710.

Those who heretofore engaged in the preparation of dictionaries did, as they should, carefully learn and go through the classics and all the miscellaneous writings of noted scholars. The number of these works, advantageous to learners, is not easy to reckon; some of them are still preserved, and others have been quite lost; the former are, to this day constantly in the hands of learners, but the latter are, to the great regret of all, gone utterly, and cannot be described. Of these the 字學 or Study of Characters is one. Books of this kind are not of equal worth, but among those which have of late years been in use, and are still regarded by all scholars as precious as an officer's signet, the 字彙 or Classification of Characters stands preëminent. In this work the characters are arranged in classes according to their strokes, and when one has ascertained the number, he can then find the one he seeks. No one can do without it; the venerable professor and old student, as well as the tyro and young learner, each and all need it.

But these persons still do not all know that the book called Wu-fang Yuen Yin, a work in which the combination of the [initial and final] sounds can be seen at a glance is even superior in some respects to the 字彙. Its compiler is Fan Tăng-fung 樊騰鳳 of Yao-shan 堯山 in the district of T'ang-shan 唐山縣 in the south of Chihli. This book not being often seen in the shops, I rather unexpectedly met with it. On looking it over closely, and examining its plan and execution, I was surprised at the carefulness displayed. The plan of the 字彙 depends on the number of strokes in a character, but this on their sounds.

There is besides the plan on which [this manual is arranged], that followed in the 六書, viz., grouping together things belonging to heaven, both single and in pairs, but not going beyond the dual powers and the five elements, so that the five elements are under the head of heaven, the five regions under that of earth, and the five tones under that of sounds. Such a work only requires the redundancies to be removed and the four or five tones to be carefully indicated to make it complete. But then this arrangement [of the 六書] is really a natural one, and not one which man made out (or can alter).

In this work the author has selected the twelve finals 韻目 with reference to the twelve musical pitch-pipes, and the five fundamental tones of voice; and these with the twenty initials 字母 he has chosen, make the warp and the woof, the lengthwise and the crosswise; by combining these according to his rules, one can find the sound of any character. If one wishes to practice the combination of sounds, and counts over the 36 finals on his fingers, he will find the plan here adopted very much easier; it is like an essay in which only the ideas are wanted, or an agreement which has only the bare stipulations. In the Canon of Shun it is said, "Notes depend on prolonging the utterance, and they are harmonized among themselves by the pitch-pipes." If one will carefully examine this work, they will find that this principle has been observed. Original sounds may without doubt properly be called those produced by harmonizing the pitch-pipes of nature with the sounds of nature.

Those who may daily use this work will at a glance so readily see the mode of combining the initials and finals, that they can have no need of rules. But how then is one to find out characters when only the number of their strokes is known? I myself really regret the number of those books which have been lost, leaving only the 字彙 Classification of Characters preserved.

In the spare moments of my public business, I have got out a revised edition of this work for the booksellers; and perhaps it will thus get a wide circulation; but those scholars who carefully use it will most certainly find many things to add to it.

September, 1710. Written by Nien Hi-yao of Kwang-ning, a district in Manchuria.

This same man, Nien Hi-yao, afterwards enlarged the book until he had introduced nearly all the characters in the language. He published it in 1728, in four thin volumes, and several editions have since been printed; its extensive list of characters makes it a useful manual. In the preface he says that, when compared with the first edition, he has "added five out of every ten characters, and expunged one out of every ten."

In arranging the initials and finals, the compilers of the Wu-fang Yuen Yin sacrificed accuracy to brevity, and hindered the ready search for a character, in order, apparently, to make a short list of finals for the memory. Its twenty initials are actually thirty-six, and the twelve finals expand to twenty-nine in the table of sounds; or to thirty-eight if those in the juh-shing be reckoned separately. The characters in this tone, which in Cantonese all come under the first four finals, are here transferred to the last six finals; "because," says the compiler, with truly Chinese logic, "the first six finals (ien, ăn, ung, ang, iu, and ao) are light and clear like heaven, and it is not suitable to mix with them the heavy and gross sounds of the juh-shing, which are therefore scattered among the last six finals (u, o, é, a, ai, and i), these being gross and thick like earth, and assimilated to the juh-shing, which therefore are distributed among them."

LIST OF TWELVE FINALS.

The finals are represented by the following twelve characters, which include fourteen others, and twelve in the juh-shing, making thirty-eight, according to our mode of writing.

1. T-ien 天 includes t-an 丹 and k-üen 圈.
2. J-ăn 人 includes p-in 賓.
3. L-ung 龍 includes l-ing 靈 and l-ăng 冷.
4. Y-ang 羊 includes k-iang 江.
5. N-iu 牛 includes ch-eu 周.
6. Ng-ao 獒 includes n-iao 鳥.
7. H-u 虎 includes h-uh 斛.
8. T-o 駝 includes t-oh 脫, and l-ioh 略.
9. Sh-é 蛇 includes h-üé 靴, y-eh 葉, y-üeh 月, and k-ieh 結.
10. M-a 馬 includes p-ah 八.
11. Ch-ai 豺 includes k-iai 皆.
12. T-i 地 and w-éi 惟, with k-üh 曲. includes t-ui 堆, ts-ü 聚, sz' 思, 'rh 而 t-eh 德, y-uh 玉, l-ih 力, and

LIST OF TWENTY INITIALS.

The initials are represented by the following twenty characters, which are subdivided into thirty-six by separating those having a medial vowel.

1. P-ang 梆.
2. P'-ao 匏.
3. M-uh 木.
4. F-ung 風.
5. T-eu 斗 and tw-an 短.
6. T'-u 土 and tw'-an 湍.
7. N-iao 鳥 and nw-an 暖.
8. L-éi 雷 and lw-an 亂.
9. Ch-uh 竹 and chw-ang 莊.
10. Ch'-ung 虫 and chw'-ang 創.
11. Sh-ih 石 and shw-ang 爽.
12. J-ih 日 and jw-an 軟.
13. Ts-ien 箭 and tsw-an 纂.
14. Ts'-ioh 鵲 and tsw'-an 竄.
15. S-z' 系 and sw-an 算.
16. Y-un 雲.
17. K-in 金 and kw-a 瓜.
18. K'-iao 橋 and kw'-a 誇.
19. Hw-o 火 and h-ao 好.
20. W-a 蛙 and ng-an 安 and the suppressed initial, as in ai 挨 or uh 屋.

If all the possible combinations of these initials and finals existed in the kwan hwa, there would be 1368 syllables, exclusive of tonal variations, to be written with our letters; but the actual number of groups is 460, and of these several are almost undistinguishable. There is some difficulty about dividing words having the terminations wa, wan, and wang, for the Chinese regard them as finals; and some other deviations from the native rules are also required by the exigencies of an alphabetic system when applied to their spelling. Some of them are caused by the medial vowel i as shen for shien 扇,—(spelled 尸連 sh-i l-ien); and others by the imperfect vowels, as tsz' for tsi 子, to distinguish it from tsi 齊, but in this, the greater accuracy of alphabetic writing is seen.

The following table includes the combinations of initials and finals in the Wu-fang Yuen Yin, with a leading character under each syllable, and also shows the juh shing in separate columns, making 532 words in all. The actual variations in speech from the given sounds in this manual are almost endless; but it is as needless as it is impossible to ascertain and try to express them all. Each student will learn them for himself.

In the Canton dialect, according to the local vocabulary, there are 53 finals and 23 initials, producing only 707 different words to be written in an alphabetic list, including those ending in the juh shing.

In the Fuhchau dialect, there are only 33 finals and 15 initials enumerated. But the real number of finals is increased by remarkable inflections of words falling in the upper and lower juh shing, so that Maclay and Baldwin's Dictionary enumerates 90 finals, and gives 928 syllables, of which scores are colloquial.

The dialect spoken in and about Changcheu, near Amoy, is exhibited in the 十五音 or Fifteen [initial] Sounds. It has 15 initials and 50 finals, which produce 846 syllables, including the modifications of the juh shing; the number of distinct enunciations in that dialect including all tonal modifications, is not far from 2500, according to Medhurst; and this is nearly the number spoken in Fuhchau. According to Douglas' Amoy Dictionary, the variations heard in the two prefectures of Changchau and Tsüenchau much exceed this number.

In the Swatow dialect, and that heard in the south-eastern part of Kwangtung, which has much affinity with the Amoy, the number of separate syllables, as given in Mr. Goddard's Manual is 674, less than either of the three preceding. The dialect known as the Hakka dialect, spoken best in Kia-ying cheu, has not been so much studied as those, but it has marked peculiarities, and approaches nearer to the kwan hwa than either of them.

The speech heard at Shanghai and Ningpo, and throughout Kiangsu and Chehkiang, assimilates still more to the kwan hwa in its idiom and pronunciation, which is probably the reason why no native vocabulary has been published in it. The Rev. C. Keith, of the American Episcopal Mission had prepared a copious vocabulary of the Shanghai dialect ready for printing, but it was lost. A carefully prepared list of syllables in the Shanghai dialect, by the late Dr. Jenkins, contains 660 words; and he reckons 33 initials and 44 finals as competent to combine all the sounds in it. The speech heard at Suchau and Hangchau differs but little from that at Shanghai and Ningpo.

The kwan hwa spoken at Peking, and indeed with inconsiderable variations in the provinces of Chihli and Shantung, has received much attention from Mr. Wade. In the Hsin Ching Lu he enumerates 25 initials and 43 finals, and places the number of distinct syllables at 397; in the Tzŭ-erh-chi, he has retained the initials and finals, and increased the syllables to 420; which probably includes nearly all the distinct words used by the people. It is much less than in any of the preceding dialects, and not one half of the variety heard at Fuhchau, which is to be ascribed chiefly to the suppression of the juh shing. The number of initials given by Mr. Wade is 25 instead of 36 as in the preceding table, as he follows more strictly the Chinese mode in the arrangement of words in the initials chw, kw, hw, &c., putting them under the finals beginning with u; which thereby correspondingly increases their number. It is not easy to decide which is the best way in an alphabetic arrangement.

SECT. II.—SYSTEM OF ORTHOGRAPHY.

If the difficulties of illustrating and analyzing the sounds in their language are almost insurmountable to Chinese philologists, the results of the various attempts of foreigners to do so have not the less proved the inherent difficulties of the attempt; and a comparison of their various systems does not encourage the hope that anything like uniformity will ever be attained. In addition to the different powers given to vowels and consonants by English, French, and Portuguese sinologues, when used to express the same Chinese sound, each in their own tongue, as wu, ou, and u for 五; or wun, ouen, and ven for 文, we have a most troublesome discrepancy in the modes of writing the same sound in the same language, especially in English, in which more has been written than in all the others. Not to quote many instances of strange spelling, as tadge-in for 大人 ta-jin; see-ue for 羞 siu; hiouei for 血 hüé; taa-maa for 大馬 ta ma; czzi cio for 橘果 küeh-kwo; tar-garn for 大安 ta-ngan, &c., the more elaborate systems devised for writing the sounds in the mandarin and local dialects, present a series of perplexing anomalies and variations hard to understand, and which renders it difficult for a person who has studied one dialect to learn the sounds in another. The Protestant missionaries at Amoy and Ningpo have published thousands of volumes in those dialects in a romanized colloquial, which they teach in their schools; but a native of Ningpo, able to read it with ease and understanding, would find himself completely nonplussed if he tried to read the Amoy colloquial according to the sounds he had learned at home. The natives of the two cities are unable to converse with each other in any case, but previous consultation among the missionaries would, perhaps, have led them to adopt a similar mode of writing the vowels, diphthongs, and consonants common to both, before these beginnings of new alphabetic languages had been laid.

The embarrassments of recognizing the Chinese characters when written in alphabetic letters, were noticed by De Guignes in 1813, before they had reached their present diversity. Speaking in his Dictionary of his changes in P. Basile's system of orthography, he remarks, "I have just explained the reasons which have led me to suppress certain letters and to simplify the orthography, and now add a table to show the changes, so that readers can recognize the same words in different authors. I refer only to works written by the missionaries, and not to those issued by other Europeans; the mode of pronouncing our letters not being uniform, in Europe it is impossible to give a general rule. In the account of Lord Macartney's Voyage, for instance, what the missionaries write Kien-long-ta-ouang-ty the English write Tchien-lung-ta-whang-tee. The letter h is certainly aspirated, but it has not the sound of tch in English; the vowel u of the word lung is sometimes pronounced o in English, but it is then short, and it is long in long, when it has the meaning it has in this phrase now quoted; the letter h is needless in whang, for the word ouang is not aspirated. I will say nothing about tee, for such an orthography is fit only for an Englishman."

In this Dictionary, an attempt has been made to apply one system of spelling to five different dialects, and though the result has not been entirely satisfactory, it has shown that their discrepancies can be reduced to something like a classification, and their vowels and diphthongs assimilated much more than has hitherto been supposed possible. To this end, it is necessary to permit some latitude to the value of the simple vowels according to the consonants which precede and follow them; diphthongs, too, must have some freedom as influenced by various consonants. For instance, in lun 倫 and sun 孫, the value of the final un is altered a little by the initial; and when a medial vowel is inserted, as in lüen 戀, and süen 宣, it is desirable to indicate the change if possible, by a differently marked vowel. Such diversities as this, however, cannot all be noted by any system.

In words ending in some diphthongs, a change in the initial will throw the syllable into a new class in one dialect and not in another; thus, lûi 雷 and méi 梅 in mandarin keep the older forms of lúi and múi in Cantonese; but at Fuh-chau, one is read lòi and the other múi. This final éi, unknown in both those cities, in the north inclines to éi and ui according to the initial, but both never have the same initial, as téi and tui, péi and pui. The diversities and analogies of this kind among the several dialects will no doubt in time receive more careful study than has yet been given to them, but the materials are at present not sufficient to lay down rules or adduce comparisons. But I think that this list is adequate to express all their sounds with sufficient precision.

The system of writing the sounds now employed is nearly the same as that formerly followed in the Tonic Dictionary of the Canton Dialect, as far as that is applicable to kwan hwa. In order to diminish the use of accented letters, the long a in father is written a instead of á; and this involved the change of the short a in quota to ă; and of áu, as ow in howl, to ao; the diphthong ai, or the English i, is altered to ei, because the ai represented the broad sound as in aisle; the terminations iá, iáng, iái, and iáh, have also all dropped their accents. Other ways adopted by previous writers to express the same sounds are added, so as to facilitate reference to their modes of spelling.

VOWELS.

1.—a as in father; written á by Bridgman, Goddard, Jenkins; ä by Yates.

2.—ă as in quota, variable; written ă by Bridgman; ă and u by Morrison; u by Edkins, Bonney; ë by Maclay; u by Goddard; e by De Guignes, Callery; ê by Wade; ā and e by Gonçalves.

3.—e as in men; written ĕ and ë by Medhurst; é by Maclay; è by Callery.

4.—é as in grey, or a in say; written e by Gonçalves, De Guignes, Maclay, Douglas; ay by Morrison, Medhurst; ei by Wade.

5.—è as in there, or a in fan, hat; written á by Maclay; à by Goddard: ă by Yates; a by Edkins; ɛ by Douglas.

6.—i as in pin, and never occurs as a final; written e and i by Morrison; í by Maclay; ĭ by Douglas; i and e by De Guignes, who writes y when it is the medial vowel.

7.—í as in machine, and left unmarked [i] when a final; written e by Morrison, Medhurst; y by De Guignes when final; i by Wade, Maclay, Douglas; ee by Bonney.

8.—o as in long, or aw in law; written ó by Bridgman, Maclay; ō by Gonçalves; ô by Jenkins; aw by Bonney; au by Edkins, Yates; o· by Doty; ɔ by Douglas.

9.—ò as in no, crow; written ow by Morrison; ō by Bonney; ou by Gonçalves; o by Maclay, Douglas, Goddard; o and ō by Yates.

10.—ö as in könig, a German sound; written o and ô by Callery; ê by Wade.

11.—u as in put, bull, and seldom heard as a final; written oo and u by Morrison; ue by Callery; ô by De Guignes, Gonçalves.

12.—ú as oo in fool, or o in move, and left unmarked [u] when a final; written oo by Morrison, Medhurst; ū by Gonçalves; ou and o by De Guignes; u by Wade, Douglas.

13.—ú as in June, abuse; written ói by Gonçalves; eu by Morrison; u by De Guignes.

14.—ù as in turn or ea in learn; written eu by Edkins, Yates; ë by Maclay.

DIPHTHONGS.

1.—ai as in aisle; written ái by Bridgman; ae by Morrison, Medhurst; ay by De Guignes.

2.—ao like ow in howl, prolonged; written aou by Morrison; au by Gonçalves; áu by Bridgman; ow by Bonney.

3.—au as ow in now; written ow by Bonney.

4.—ei as in height, or i in sigh; written ai by Douglas, Bridgman; ī and ie by Bonney; ei and ai by Gonçalves.

5.—éi as eyi in greyish; written eĭ by Morrison, Wade; oeĭ and ei by Gonçalves.

6.—eu as ou in souse, shorter than No. 3; written ow by Morrison; eu by Callery; ou by Gonçalves, Wade.

7.—éu as au in Capernaum; eu by Maclay; ay-u by Bonney; ea by Gonçalves; eo and ao by Devan.

8.—ia as in piastre, or ya in yard; written ea by Morrison, Gonçalves.

9.—iai and iao, each letter sounded; written eae and eaou by Morrison; èau by Gonçalves.

10.—ie as in siesta; written ëe by Morrison, Medhurst.

11.—ié as ea in fealty; written íe by Jenkins.

12.—io as yaw in yawn; written eo and eŏ by Morrison.

13.—iu as ew in pew; written iú by Bridgman; ew by Morrison; ieou by De Guignes; ieu by Gonçalves, Maclay; ee-ue by Bonney.

14.—iŭ like ew in chewing prolonged; written io by De Guignes.

15.—oĭ as in boil; written oy by Morrison; oe by Douglas.

16.—òi as owi in knowing; written oi by Maclay.

17.—ua as in Mantua, each vowel sounded; written oa by Douglas, De Guignes.

18.—üe as in duet; it runs into üĕ when a final.

19.—ui as ewy in dewy, or oui in Louis; written ouy by De Guignes; uy by Morrison; oei by Gonçalves.

ANOMALOUS VOWELS.*

21.—'m, a sound like hm with closed lips, as a suppressed cough; written m by Medhurst, Douglas.

22.—'ng, a nasal made by closing the nose, a whining sound; written ng by Douglas, Goddard.

23.—^{n}, a nasal in the middle of a word as ki^{n}a, or oftener at the end, as pi^{n}; more distinct usually than in the French vin; written n by Edkins.

24.—sz', tsz', a peculiar sibilant; the first can be made by changing di in dizzy to s, and speaking it quickly; written sze by Morrison; sū by Gonçalves; sz̆ and tz̆ by Wade; sĭ by Edkins; ss by De Guignes; se by Callery.

25.—ch' and sh', like the preceding but softer; they are often uttered by a person who stutters, as if in speaking chin or shin, he could not get out the n; or like the sound made when chiding a child for making a noise; written chĭh and shĭh by Wade.

26.—'rh, like the word err; written olr by Gonçalves; érh by Wade; urh by Morrison; eul by De Guignes; ell by Callery; ûr by Jenkins; rh by Edkins.

CONSONANTS.

Of these, only h, k, m, n, ng, p, and t, occur as final letters.

1.—b as in bar.

2.—ch as in church; written tch by De Guignes.

3.—ch$^{\epsilon}$ the same sound aspirated.

4.—d as in dun.

5.—dj as in djezzar, or j in judge; written j by Yates, Douglas, Goddard.

6.—dz as in adze.

8.—g as in gag.

9.—h as in hung; as a final it is nearly suppressed.

10.—h$^{\epsilon}$ before i and ū, a sibilant sound resembling an affected lisp, and easily confounded with sh; written hs by Wade, h' by Edkins, sh by Jenkins.

11.—j as in the French jamais.

12.—k as in king, kick; written c by Gonçalves.

13.—k$^{\epsilon}$ nearly the same sound, but softened and aspirated.

16.—n as in nun.

17.—ng as in singing; written g as an initial and m as a final by Gonçalves; ñg initial and m final by Callery; gn by Medhurst; gh by De Guignes as initial.

18.—p as in pot, lop.

19.—p$^{\epsilon}$ the same sound aspirated.

20.—s as in sand; before i, it closely resembles No. 10.

21.—sh as in shall; written ch by De Guignes; x by Gonçalves, Callery.

23.—t$^{\epsilon}$ the same sound aspirated.

24.—ts as in wits; written ch and ç by Gonçalves; z by De Guignes.

25.—ts$^{\epsilon}$ the same sound aspirated.

27.—w as in want, wo; when it follows another consonant, as chw, hw, kw, &c., it shortens as the two coalesce; for this position Wade and Goddard use u, and Douglas o; written v by Gonçalves; v and ou by De Guignes.

* The late T. T. Meadows objected to the term Imperfect Vowels for the sounds here brought together, saying that "an imperfect vowel is really an impossibility." In this he was strictly correct, perhaps, but still they resemble suppressed vowels, and by grouping them, may be better illustrated.

28.—y as in yard; written i by Callery, Gonçalves.
30.—zh as z in azure.

One object kept in view in this system has been to abridge the use of accented letters, to do without which altogether has by all writers been found to be impracticable, consistently with accuracy; and another has been to adapt the spelling to the use of English readers. How far these objects have been attained, practice alone will show; but it is not an unimportant thing to the student, how a word is written, for the spelling insensibly affects his pronunciation. For example, the word 絨 is sounded like jung, or zhung, or rung or zung, by different persons in Peking; and constantly reading it in one of these modes confirms him in that pronunciation, while another mode will influence another person.

The present attempt to harmonize the sounds of the five dialects by one system of spelling, has this element of error, that I have not been able to consult natives of Fuhchau or Amoy, and hear their pronunciation. In the brief list of corresponding sounds given at the head of every syllable in the Dictionary, there are no doubt both errors and deficiencies, owing to this disadvantage. Heretofore, each dialect has been spelled without reference to the sounds in other dialects, and this has caused needless discrepancies, which become apparent when a comparison is instituted. For instance, the o in note is not heard in the north, where the o in long prevails; while in the south, this last is rather unusual, and has been the one usually marked with an accent, though taking the whole country together it is by far the most common, and the o in note ought to be marked. In the north, no word like kím occurs, with í (as in machine) in the middle; and in the south, no guttural ng begins a word; but the short i in pin is a thousand times the commonest, and should be left unaccented. These peculiarities render it difficult to adapt one system to all the dialects, and not employ many accented letters in some of them; but the thing is not impossible, and with a good degree of accuracy too. The greater difficulty is to get those who have become accustomed to their own modes of writing to adopt another more generally applicable. A few remarks on the preceding lists of vowels and consonants will explain the changes they undergo in various positions.

VOWELS.

1. a.—This occurs in all the dialects; it is never to be sounded as in English fan, hat.

2. ă.—The common use of u in English as in sun, to represent this sound has made it a perplexing one to write; and the phrase, "The mother bird flutters o'er her young," shows that in that language it is very differently written. I prefer ă to a, e, ĕ, ê, or u of other authors, chiefly because it is less liable to be mispronounced by the general reader, except the last. But that letter is needed to write another sound.

3. e.—Along the southern coasts, this vowel is heard alone before consonants, as meng, kek, veh, but northward it is usually preceded by i, as in lien; when followed by n it constantly inclines to the sound of a in man, and even that of a in far. When used in teh, seh, it often changes its quality according to the succeeding word into ö or é.

4. é.—This vowel occasionally occurs at Fuhchau in the middle of a word, as in héng, ték, before a decided consonant; and at Shanghai and Swatow, in nasalized words, as kʰé, pén; but it is almost always a final, as ché, mé, or succeeding i or ü, as tié, hüé.

5. è.—This is rarely heard in the north or at Canton, but in Kiangsu and southward it is common alone, as in lèn, sèh, pèn; or more commonly preceded by i as in pièt, pièn, sièk, lièng; in all these words its tendency is to broaden out into liang, sian, as at Amoy and Swatow.

6. i.—This vowel is always written in the middle of a word, as ming, kik, lih; in the latter class of words it apparently ends them, but even then the vowel approaches the next [i], so that tih and pih become ti and pi. As a medial vowel in diphthongs like ia, ie, it is one of the commonest sounds in the language, and undergoes very little alteration.

7. í.—This vowel occurs only at the end of words in the kwan hwa; but is often heard in their middle in the southern dialects, as pín, líng, kít, &c., where it will be more likely to be pronounced aright if accented. I have, therefore, written it like the last vowel (i) when it is a final, in order to reduce the number of accented letters, as the final i in English is usually written y as in mighty, and there is little danger of confusion. Mr. Wade uses i for both the sounds in tree and trim, apparently to save accents, and they do run into each other; Maclay transposes i and í, as I write them, to í and i, for the same reason; but in those southern dialects the medial vowel in the dipthongs ia, iu, iau, is always short, and thus two sounds are given to one symbol, which is undesirable.

8. o.—This is the only sound of the vowel in mandarin, and almost always as a final; but after b, f and p, in the southern dialects, it often runs into the next, where it also occurs in the middle, as song, loi, kok.

9. ò.—This sound, as in note, is not heard in mandarin, but, from Shanghai southward, it is so common that it has usually been left unmarked; at Fuhchau it is common in yòng, siòng, lòi, &c., occurring in many words which have an a at the north. At Amoy and Canton it is less frequent. To mark such words seems to be more likely to insure their proper pronunciation, than to expect the English reader to pronounce tong and toi, as towng and towy; though, on the other hand to and pok are more like to be sounded like toe and poke, than like taw and pawk. It is a choice of difficulties, but the argument in favor of writing o and ò as in long and lo, is not a little strengthened by the vast preponderance of the first sound throughout China.

10. ŏ.—This sound is not often heard in the southern dialects, but is common in Kiangsu and northward, chiefly as a final; the é in ché, a in tsan, o in toh, and u in tu, each and all run into it in one place or another; in Chihli, it characterizes words which have a tendency to become guttural.

11. u.—A difficult sound to express uniformly, as it is so much modified by the letters before and after it, and runs into the next; it is never heard as a final, but unites with a as a medial, as is noticed under ua and w (Nos. 17 and Consonants 27). Maclay writes the sounds u and ú alike, but they are not the same, and especially in Cantonese are kept clearly distinct as in sun, sut, shorter sounds than soon, soot; while kún, kút are like coon, coot; in the word sung, the vowel is evidently a prolongation of sun rather than of kún. Common readers will no doubt often mispronounce such words, until they hear the right sound.

12. ú.—The frequent use of this vowel as a final makes it desirable to reduce the number of accented words by leaving it unmarked when in that position, or in the juh shing, as tu, tuh, where alone it occurs in mandarin, and marking it in the middle as mún, fút. In Canton and places north of it, there is a tendency to sound this final as ò before certain initials, as mò, pò, for mu, pu.

13. ü.—This vowel sound occurs in all the dialects in the middle and end of words, as chü, shün, püt, ngüng, ük, &c., or following the vowels i, a, e, and é, suffering different modifications with each of them; its tendency is to run into u (No. 11), but the changes are slight. It has been generally written in this way.

14. ù.—This is not found in mandarin, and is not a common sound. It runs into ŏ and é when preceding a consonant; it is a common final in Shanghai, and in Swatow and that region; in Fuhchau it also precedes other vowels as chùä, sùuh, ngùung; but these combinations are limited to a small district. Some would perhaps, write it ă, which it nearly resembles, had it not been prolonged as if followed by an r, as in the English words turn, bird, her.

DIPHTHONGS.

1, 2, 3. ai, ao, au.—These three are almost everywhere heard only as finals, and the two first form, when preceded by i, the common triphthongs, iai and iao. In Fuhchau, they are followed by h or k, as in paih, pauk. The third sound is written ou by Wade, but the risk of mispronouncing words thus written as soo, hoo, and not sow, how, owing to the common use of ou by the French to express a final u, renders au or eu preferable; the English ow for au is also liable to confusion, as seen in the sentence, "The row of flowers now flowed to the tow-line." Morrison used ow to express both au and ò (i.e. now and no) in two of his works.

4. ei.—This final sound, unknown in mandarin, is common in Cantonese, where it is carefully distinguished from ái, but the two seem to run into each other further north, or ei is changed to í, and No. 5, éi.

6. eu.—It is doubtful whether the distinction between this final and No. 3 is sufficiently clear to authorize two forms of writing them; at the North the pronunciation of characters like 州 cheu, 勾 keu, 手 sheu, is usually quicker than the pronunciation of the same words chau, kau, shau, in Cantonese and other southern dialects. They are very much alike, however, and the chief reason for separating them was to indicate this diversity, which is not a fanciful one.

7. éu.—This sound is rarely heard as a final, and is most common at Canton; at Fuhchau the second vowel is often prolonged in ü, as séüng, while at Canton it is also shortened into ă, and forms one of the most characteristic sounds in that dialect.

10. ie.—This diphthong is unknown at Canton, where the í take its place, as in sín for sien, but reäppears as one goes north. When followed by n or m, it turns into ièm or iam, ièn or ian at Swatow and Amoy, and ieng at Fuhchau; at Ningpo and Shanghai it is again superseded by in and iⁿ. In all words having this diphthong before n, there is difficulty at the south in distinguishing ie from iè; but at the north this difficulty is mostly confined to those words where the i is merged in the other vowel.

11, 12. ié, io.—These two have some affinity, but they do not run into each other; both are oftenest found in the juh shing, and their variations from the mandarin into other dialects are so capricious as to be irreducible to any rules which would be useful.

13, 14. iu, iü.—The first of these occurs mostly as a final in all the dialects, but it is also heard in mandarin before n in a few words; the second occurs only in the middle of words, and then is rather a prolongation of iu; it is hardly ever heard in Fuhkien or Kwangtung.

15, 16. oi, òi.—Both these diphthongs are confined to the extreme south, and the latter seems to be peculiar to Fuhchau; they are easily distinguished.

17. ua.—The distinct sounds of both vowels are often heard at Swatow and Amoy, like too-an, loo-an; but elsewhere wa (see Consonants No. 27), better represents this diphthong to the English reader than oa or ua, as they are liable to be too much separated.

18. üé, üe.—The first of these two is most easily distinguished from the other in those words which are in the three first tones, but as most of the words are in the juh shing, and followed by the h, they are in practice nearly alike in sound.

19, 20. ui, iú.—The second of these is distinctly marked in the Cantonese under initials like k, t, and ts, but they everywhere glide into each other and into éi. In Fuhchau, they run into i and òi, and at Shanghai into é, both of them being everywhere heard as finals.

ANOMALOUS VOWELS.

21, 22. 'm, 'ng.—These two words are heard from Shanghai southwards in the colloquial; they are really vowel sounds, and at Amoy they occur preceded by a consonant, as s'ng, h'm or hm.

23. ^{n}.—This nasal sound is unknown at Canton or Fuhchau, but occurs at Swatow and Amoy, and more frequently at Shanghai; though hardly so marked, and not found in the middle of a word; the raised ^{n} is probably its fittest mark, though in the romanized Ningpo dialect it is undistinguished.

24. sz', tsz', dz', zz'.—These four are the only forms of this sibilant; the first two are common in mandarin and at Canton, but all are entirely unheard between Swatow and Fuhchau. The last two are heard mostly at Shanghai, and the regions of Kiangsu and Chehkiang.

25. ch', sh'.—The characters spoken with these peculiar vowels get their full sounds of chi, ch'i, and shi as one goes south from the Yangtsz' River. The apocopated form is unknown at Canton or at Fuhchau. The Wu-fang Yuen Yin indicates the full sound of chi and shi as the standard, and in this work they have, therefore, been all arranged under those syllables, while the contracted form is placed under each character. It is probable, that of the two forms chi, shi, and ch', sh', the latter is most generally heard.

26. 'rh.—This sound is seldom heard south of the Mêiling, and its pronunciation is uniform; the many foreign modes of writing it show the difficulty of expressing it satisfactorily. In Peking, it is often heard as if preceded by a consonant, as mi'rh, w'rh, f'rh, &c., which is caused by the elision of an intermediate final, the full sound being ming 'rh 明而, wăn 'rh 聞而, fäng 'rh 風而, &c.

CONSONANTS.

1. b.—A common initial at Swatow and Amoy, but unknown at Canton or Fuhchau; it reäppears at Shanghai in many of the words so spelled at Amoy.

2, 3. ch, ch'.—This initial and ts, ts', are interchanged so much and so irregularly all over the country, that it is impossible to follow their variations. In Canton, they are used as initials very nearly according to the spelling of the K'anghi Tsz'tien and Wu-fang Yuen Yin, but as one goes north, they mingle in a greater or less degree, and many natives cannot tell them apart. At Swatow and Amoy, ts is heard doubtfully only before a, o, and u; but on reaching Fuhchau, it is altogether merged in ch; both reäppear at Shanghai, but mostly applied to a different set of characters, and this interchange continues more or less along the valley of the Yangtsz' River.

4, 6, 11, 5. d, d., j, dj.—The first two of these initials are very common around Shanghai; the last is also heard there and at Swatow and Amoy, but none of them at Canton or at Fuhchau, where such words begin with t or y. The digraph dj is preferable to the single j for writing it, since it is a harsh form of the soft j so common in mandarin, and not so likely to be mispronounced as the simple j is. At Peking, d is often heard before a and u, and the initial t often becomes d, and the j runs into r; as da for ta, and rän for jän.

7. f.—This common initial is unheard from Swatow to Fuhchau, h almost everywhere taking its place; it occurs in all other dialects.

8. g.—This initial easily runs into ng, and their differences are sometimes imperceptible. At Swatow, Amoy and Shanghai, both ng and g are clearly heard as initials; at Canton and Fuhchau, the ng is just as plainly spoken in all words, and none begin with g. Morrison and Medhurst wrote g alone for the mandarin, but ng is more nearly correct.

9. h.—This, at the beginning of words, is the same initial aspirate as in the English words hung, holy; but to extend the use of the letter and make it entirely silent in words beginning with an aspirated d, p or t as consonant, as Medhurst and Douglas have done, is injudicious, owing to the sounds which ph and th have in English, and which will always mislead when the uninitiated read them. But to those who have been long accustomed to the use of h final, as the best sign for expressing the indistinct juh shing, Wade's application of it for a few of the Pekingese sounds in other tones is still more perplexing and needless. The characters to which he often applies it as 是 shih, 界 chieh, 爺 yeh, &c., are never heard in the juh shing, while he leaves it off in 的 ti, 屋 u, 得 tê, &c. Such use, therefore, tends to mislead those who are not acquainted with the local patois, and even to them it is a perplexity.

10. h'.—This sound is not heard in the four coast dialects, in which it drops the sibilant sound, or takes an initial y, or more rarely an s; it is common at Shanghai. The digraph hs adopted by Meadows and Wade does not exactly express it, for there is no proper s in the sound, and sh is too much; if one puts the finger between the teeth, and tries to speak hing or hü, he will probably nearly express this sibilant initial. The Spanish x, as in Quixote, comes near it, and would be much the best symbol, if it were not that it would be mispronounced by the common reader, as in xiang 香, xin 忻, &c.

12, 13. k, k'.—As a final, from Shanghai to Canton this consonant always indicates the juh shing of those words whose other tones end in ng, as ping, pik; hung, hak. In Kiangsu, it is often doubtful whether the word ends abruptly enough for an h, or should be written h. The aspirated initial k before i and u is one of the difficult sounds in the mandarin, and is often heard like kt, ch or ks, and still unlike all these.

14. l.—Along the southern coast this initial is often pronounced as n before a and i; not so frequently before í, o, or u; but all over China there is a curious interchange of the two letters, which perplexes the foreigner. At Amoy, l often approximates the sound of d.

15. m.—This letter occurs as a final from Canton to Amoy, in those words which end in n in the kwan hwa; but there seems to be no general rule guiding the change, as many retain the n. It is unheard at Fuhchau and northward, but reäppears in Kiangsi. As an initial, m often changes into b at Amoy and Swatow.

16. 17. n, ng.—These two liquids are employed as finals in every part of China; but in Amoy and Shanghai, they often take a nasalized form. As initials, n often interchanges with l; and ng in the mandarin is elided into a guttural ă or ö, as ^{ng}ăn, ^{ng}ö, especially in Chihli; but this initial is the most capricious of all, and its changes are irreducible to a general rule.

18. 19. p, pʿ.—As a final, this letter only occurs in many parts of the coast provinces south of the Yang-tsz' River, in the juh shing of those words whose other tones end in m in Cantonese, as kim, kip. In mandarin such words always end in n. As a final, p is unknown from Fuhchau northward, but as an initial it generally follows the mandarin, except in Kiangsu, where it alters into b in some of the tones before certain vowels.

20. 21. s, sh.—These two initials play the same part among the Chinese as they seem to have done among the ancient Israelites, and form a true shibboleth by which a man's native place can be detected. They are used at Canton at the beginning of nearly the same words which divide them in the Wu-fang Yuen Yin; but from that city going coastwise to Shanghai, the sh nearly everywhere turns into s or z, and reäppears generally when further north; there are, however, many exceptions over this wide range. Between Canton and Macao, for instance, the sh is changed in many words, as shui 水 becomes sui; and just the same difference exists between Peking and Tientsin; yet in Szʿhwui hien, a district west of Macao, most of the words which at Canton begin with s take the sh.

22. 23. t, tʿ.—This letter occurs as a final in the same regions with p; and as p always follows words ending with m, so the t shows the juh shing of words ending in n in the other tones; the modes of variation from the fourth tone in mandarin into the abrupt consonants k, p and t, in the three southern dialects, have not been traced sufficiently to lay down any rules; at Fuhchau, the finals p and t are not heard. As an initial, t becomes d in certain tones in those parts of Kiangsu near the Yangtsz' River.

24. 25. ts, tsʿ.—These are much interchanged everywhere in China with ch, chʿ; and, in consequence, many words in this Dictionary will be sought for under one of them which have been placed under the other. In the regions from Swatow to Fuhchau, it is entirely superseded by ch, and in Shanghai is mostly used in those words which at Canton and Peking begin with ch.

26. v.—This initial is heard chiefly in the Yangtsz' valley, where it begins words elsewhere commencing with f or w. It is unknown at Canton or Peking, and the regions around those cities.

27. w, wa, hwa.—This letter is employed as an initial consonant in this work, as in wang, wăn. The Chinese spell words beginning with kw, sw, &c., as ku-wang for kwang, su-wan for swan, &c., where the medial vowel is so closely joined with the initial, that it is more distinct for us to make the initial out of both. Others, however, treat them as separate. Wade and Goddard use u as in shuo 說, suan 算, &c.; De Guignes and Douglas use o, as hoang 黃, hoat 發, &c.; but the general method has been to use w, and regard the letters shw or hw as the initial. The medial vowel is itself modified by the preceding consonant, and after t or p it is much more distinct than after k or h; but an Englishman is less likely to misread a word written lwan or gwat, than if it be written luan or loan, guat or goat. Besides which, as stated above, the diphthong ua is more distinctly heard at Amoy and Swatow in many words ending with a vowel as sua, p^n*ua*. In Fuhchau and Amoy, the initials ch^g, h, k, l, m, n, ng, p and s are followed by w; i.e. by this medial vowel, making this class of initial more frequent there than elsewhere; at Canton, kw is the only initial of this kind, and gw, hw and kw at Shanghai. Though the Chinese divide by the initial consonant, as 多官 to-kwan for 端 twan, their ignorance of alphabetic writing makes their practice no guide to our mode of expressing such sounds; and the use of w is attended with the least risk of mispronunciation.

28. y.—This letter is used only as a consonant in this work. De Guignes used y to express the final í and i, as in ky 記 and tsay 再; and some others write the short i in the diphthongs ie, ia, &c., with it. At Ningpo it has been thus employed, and when the i is doubled, as in níng, níh, the use of y, as in nying, nyih, is perhaps preferable. In Peking, some words beginning with y change it into r before u and ă, as rung 容 for yung, rueh for 月 yueh; but it is an exceptional deviation

29. 30. z, zh.—The initial z begins many words at Shanghai and Ningpo which elsewhere begin with ts or s, and forms a marked feature of the speech of that region; it is unknown in Fuhkien, and is limited in other directions as in Kiangsi and Nganhwui. The initial zh is a change from j in Peking and its vicinity, but does not extend very far, as it is unknown in Shantung.

SECT. III.—ASPIRATES.

Those words which commence with ch, chw, k, kw, p, t, tw, ts, tsw, are, according to our spelling, divided into aspirated and unaspirated characters, but the Chinese philologists see no connection between them. Indeed they have no well-understood name for a hard breathing like an aspirate, and the usual term 噴氣 is of foreign origin, which no native scholar can understand without explanation. In alphabetic writing, when the aspirate begins the word, as hang 杭, hwang 黃, it is plainly marked by the letter h alone, which distinguishes ang from hang, and wang from hwang. But if this letter be written after other consonants, especially p or t, the word is liable to be mispronounced as phing (fing) 平, or thing 聽, at least by Englishmen. De Guignes used it in words like khoueng 誆, tchhouang 創, thsiouan 泉; but a Frenchman would not err in this way. He was followed by Medhurst, who in order to avoid the mispronunciation of words like thing 廳 wrote it t'hing, placing an aspirate before the h; Douglas omits the aspirate, as in thau 透, phi, 皮; but there is such a risk of confusion, that they have not been followed elsewhere.

The Greek spiritus asper ['] is now generally regarded as a sufficient and easily-written sign, to indicate the aspirated words under the above nine initials; but in cases where a printing-office does not afford a proper aspirate ['], an inverted comma ['] must take its place. In this Dictionary, the aspirated characters immediately follow the unaspirated, and are not all placed in a new series by themselves, as is done in Maclay's Fuhchau, and Douglas' Amoy Dictionary. There are 136 aspirated syllables in the Wu-fang Yuen Yin, not including those under the initials h and hw, which number 41. In Cantonese, there are 157 of the former and 40 of the latter; but Medhurst in his Hokkëen Dictionary enumerates 281 aspirated syllables in all, many of which are colloquial. There are fewer aspirated words in the Fuhchau dialect, and their number appears to decrease as one goes north.

Aspirated words have been classed as surds, to distinguish them from the unaspirated, or sonants, but this distinction seems to be inapplicable in relation to Chinese. Such words are continually changed from one class to the other by the compilers of general and local native vocabularies, even when the initial consonant does not change. If we compare two or three dialects with each other, we find that the aspirated and unaspirated words are not fixed; one drops, and another takes an aspirate, especially under the initials k and h. Learning the aspirate is an important subject to the student, who will find it beneficial to read over lists of characters of both kinds with a teacher, so as to distinguish them.

In some respects they are harder to learn than the tones, as the distinction is very delicate to our ears, and is more a matter of memory than of imitation.

SECT. IV.—SHING OR TONES.

It would be better, for many reasons, to introduce the term shing into philological works upon Chinese, than to try to explain the foreign word tone when it denotes the curious feature of Chinese words by which their meaning is changed according to the inflexion of voice used in speaking them. In English we speak of a whining tone, a guttural tone, a hoarse or harsh accent, but the shing of the Chinese are quite different from such modulations of voice, which affect only the sound of a sentence or important word, and not its meaning. There are cases in all languages where accent and emphasis alter the meaning of particular words, and some may choose to call such modulations the tone, and compare them to the shing of the Chinese, but the two are hardly comparable. In the Burmese, Siamese, Shan and Assamese languages, there are remains of the same system of shing which prevails in Chinese; but in those countries the shing are not found in every word, nor do they involve their meanings to an equal degree.

The shing in the Chinese language really partake of the nature of vowels; and as the vowels in western languages are constantly undergoing local changes which give rise to particular patois, so have these delicate modulations suffered various changes in different parts of China, till they are involved in a perfect maze of obscurity and contrariety.

The mode of representing the shing in an alphabetic language, must of course be entirely arbitrary, but only three methods have been adopted. The earliest was that of Fourmont, De Guignes, Morrison, Medhurst, Douglas and others, of marking the vowels with different accents. De Guignes employed five, as yūn, yûn, yùn, yún and yŭh, to indicate the differences in the sounds of 氳, 雲, 隕, 運, 聿, and this series of tonal accents has attained a wide use since his dictionary was published in 1813. Dr. Morrison employed only four marks, as chāng, chàng, cháng, chăh, to represent 張, 漲, 漲, 帳, 札, where the upper and lower p'ing shing are indicated by the same sign; he left the aspirate unmarked. This mode was adopted in form by Medhurst in his Mandarin Dictionary, but altered in fact by dropping the accent for the upper p'ing shing and writing châng for the lower p'ing shing. In his Hokkëen Dictionary, he increased the four marks of Morrison to seven, but altered their application in order to distinguish the seven tones in the Amoy dialect; in this Douglas follows him. These were written kwun, kwún, kwùn, kwut, kwût, kwún, kwūn, kwut, to show the local differences between the sounds of the characters 君, 滾, 棍, 骨, 群, 滾, 郡, 滑, thus using only five accents to show seven shing, and these not in the same way as De Guignes had employed them.

The strongest objection against using marks at all over vowels to denote the shing, is that they materially interfere with those marks which show the power of those vowels. In De Guignes' Dictionary, the aspirate, tone and vowel marks are all put over the word; and Medhurst was obliged in the same way to write këén, keǎouh, kêê, where one sign is for the prosody, and the other for the shing. At present, in Amoy, where the missionaries have adopted his system of marks in their romanized books, they have contrived to eliminate all prosodical marks affecting the vowels, except that of o in no, and o in long, the latter being written o. No tones are marked in the romanized books published at Ningpo, and of the two, this is the best way.

A second mode, employed by Gonçalves, is that of marking the shing by a figure after the word, as 1, 2, 3, 4, to represent the same five shing which De Guignes denoted by five accents; but it is difficult to understand why he did not write them 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, at once, and not use an inverted period for the p'ing shing. The following sentence,—we are his comrades., 我們是他的夥計 is written *uo*2 *men*1 *xe*3 t'a˙ *ti*4 *hŏ*2 *ki*3 by Gonçalves in his orthography and tones, where the mark for the p'ing shing in the fourth word t'a˙ would easily be overlooked. He applied the same five signs to indicate the eight shing in the Canton dialect, which necessarily mixed them up so, that no reader could possibly decide what the figures meant, and get the right tone. Meadows recommended four figures too, to represent the two p'ing shing and the two tseh shing, and he has been followed by Wade, because it is the simplest. So it would be, if there was only one system all over China. Wade applies the figures 1, 2, 3, 4, to the upper and lower p'ing shing, shang shing and k'ü shing, so that each one represents a different tone from that denoted by Gonçalves. The sentence above quoted would be written in the Peking dialect, wo^{3} mên^{1} shih^{1} t'a^{1} ti^{1} 'huo^{3} chi^{4} by him, and this comparison shows the confusion which would ensue, if the use of figures was extended to the various dialects, and their number run up to seven or eight. In his Grammar of the Shanghai Dialect, Mr. Edkins has contrived to eliminate all tonal marks except an apostrophe ['] and a comma [‘], as 'lau 老 for the shang shing and tau‘ 道 for the k'ü shing; but they are entirely insufficient for general use, and rather confusing in his work. The capabilities of the printing-office probably influenced his adoption of such queer signs.

The third mode, which was begun in Bridgman's Chrestomathy, and has been adopted by Yates, Lobscheid, Goddard and Baldwin, is a modification of the native mode of indicating the tones. Chinese authors do not usually indicate the shing; but in certain cases where a word has two tones, with two corresponding significations, they mark the tone by a semicircle on the corner of the characters as oh 惡, and u ㇀惡, or tu 度 and toh 度; in these cases, the second signification is the one marked. This mode has this advantage over the other two, that the marks are easily understood by the natives, and are applicable alike to all dialects without risk of confusion. Though all modes of denoting the shing must be alike conventional to the foreign reader, only the native method can be used for both Chinese and English with equal ease. Thus the sentence I wish to go and do it,—ngo yao' 'tseu ㇀ts'ien k'ü' tso', '我要' '走 ㇀前 去' 做', is read 'ngo iu' 'tsau ㇀ts'in hü' tsò^{2} '我要' '走 ㇀前 去' 做' in the Cantonese, and the different tones of the first and last characters are as accurately and easily indicated in one language as in the other, but could not easily be so by means of figures or accents appended to the characters. If figures are used, there ought to be a double series, employing 1, 2, 3, 4, for the upper p'ing, shang, k'ü, and juh, and 5, 6, 7, 8, for the lower p'ing, shang, k'ü and juh, so as to make them applicable alike to all dialects; otherwise, as in the example cited above from Gonçalves and Wade, they fail of being read correctly. Native scholars always call the tones by their names, and do not number them.

It is a great help to the learner to have the tones marked on the word, and several years practice has proved the ease with which the native marks are recognized. In writing the names of persons and places for foreigners, no one adds marks to designate the tones, but in a work designed for the beginner, the tones can easily be distinguished.

Every character in this Dictionary is marked with its proper tone for the nan hwa, according to the Wu-fang Yuen Yin. They follow each other in the order of that work, shang p'ing, hia p'ing, shang shing and k'ü shing; words in the juh shing being placed by themselves. Underneath each is given the Peking pronunciation in its tone in that city, with a blank space for the student to insert the sound in any other dialect. The five tones of the nan hwa and the four tones of the Pekingese, are marked according to the same system adopted in my Tonic Dictionary of the Canton Dialect; in which the whole eight are given as in the following series.

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
上	上	上	上	下	下	下	下
平	聲	去	入	平	上	去	入
[ˌ]	[ˊ]	[ˋ]	[˴]	[ˏ]	[ˎ]	[ˀ]	[ˏ]
shang	shang	shang	shang	hia	hia	hia	hia
p'ing	shing	k'ü	juh	p'ing	shang	k'ü	juh
溫	穩	慍	屈	雲	尹	混	核
ˌ	ˊ	ˋ	˴	ˏ	ˎ	ˀ	ˏ

In Peking, the tones of these eight characters are easily marked by the same set of signs;—

ˌ溫 ˊ穩 ˋ慍 ˴屈 ˏ雲 ˎ尹 ˀ混 ˏ核

In all the southern dialects, the shing are commonly divided into 上聲 and 下聲, or an upper and lower series. They are also more generally called 平聲 and 仄聲; the first term denoting the two even tones, the second all the others, grouped as the deflected tones. East of Canton to Fuhchau, the second and sixth or upper and lower shang shing, coalesce in exactly the same sound. In the region around Shanghai, the two series are subjected to other modifications, according to Edkins, who enumerates twelve modulations heard in the shing of words, and enters very fully into the subject, illustrating each one with examples.

The names which have been given to the shing by foreigners, have usually had more or less reference to their native names. For instance, the 上平 and 下平聲 have been called the upper and lower monotone, primary and secondary smooth tone, upper acute and lower even tone, and high and low even. Other tones have also received many names, but as soon as the learner begins to perceive their real nature by talking them with the natives, he naturally uses their names as the ones which most accurately describe them.

As this work is chiefly intended to aid in learning the written language, the student is referred to other treatises* for general and particular descriptions and illustrations of the shing in the various dialects. After reading the authors referred to in the note, it is probable that the student will agree with Edkins, that the Chinese terms 平上去入 "do not in the majority of cases, represent the actual effect of the sound on the ear. When first adopted they must have represented the tones of the dialect spoken by the writer who selected them; but when applied according to universal practice, to the sounds given to the same characters in other parts of the empire, they convey no idea of the actual pronunciation."

Yet the characteristics of the shing are alike in all parts of the country. They are not, strictly speaking, either tones, accents, modulations, brogue or emphasis, as these terms are used in European languages; but perhaps more nearly resemble musical notes, and are best illustrated by the variations of pitch and time in an instrument. Mr. Hartwell says, "the shing have five elements, viz., pitch, quality of voice, inflection, stress, and time," and he has neatly explained those heard at Fuhchau by comparing them with musical intervals and their variations on the staff, taking the middle line of the staff as the key-note of the speaker's voice. The note G struck successively on a violin, an organ, and a flute, for example, strikes the ear very differently, just as the voices of a child or a man do; yet the three sounds are the same on the gamut, and the note chords on all the instruments. But let G sharp be struck on one of them, and we feel the discord; it is not the note at all. So in respect to Chinese shing; if the right shing be not spoken, the right word is not spoken, it is some other word. For instance if a person says ku' instead of ˌ*ku* 孤 an orphan, he does not say the word for orphan at all, he says that for 故' old, or 固' firm, or 顧' to hire, or some other word, equally unlike it in meaning. The shing constitutes an integral part of the word, and has nothing to do with stress or emphasis; they always retain their peculiar force, whether at the beginning or end of a sentence, whether asking or replying to a question, whispering or scolding, soothing or menacing,—they remain ever the same. A native seldom or never thinks whether he has the right tone or not, but speaks as he learned it from his infancy; just as an Englishman has no difficulty in uttering the words that thing is thoroughly thrashed, which to a Frenchman or Dutchman is well nigh impossible.

If one has a quick and imitative ear, he will learn the tones while learning characters and expressions, and by mixing with the people his ear will unconsciously catch the right sound. Let him not be perplexed as to their nature, which has nothing mysterious, but imitate the sounds as well as the words of the sentences he hears, as he would learn a tune, or when trying to mimic another, and not try to find out certain rules by which he must train his voice. in his Course, or the sets of examples drawn out by Edkins in his Shanghai Grammar, or similar exercises made by the student for the particular dialect he is learning, as is recommended in the Canton Tonic Dictionary, and in Medhurst's Hokkëen Dictionary, can profitably be read over and over until the ear is trained to the tones. It is not difficult for a foreigner to be understood in Chinese, even if he does misapply the shing of many words; but one is almost sure to imitate and learn the correct tone of the commonest words as he becomes familiar with them, if he pays a little attention to them at the outset, and feels that a vicious pronunciation will be harder to correct, than it is to learn a good one at first.

The unchangeable nature of the written character has probably had a powerful influence, in forcing the people of China to pay close attention to their sounds, in order to avoid the confusion which would ensue in speaking dozens and scores of homophonous words. It is absolutely necessary that a language so very meager in vocables, should have some contrivance to supplement this paucity, and natural that its speakers should endeavor to qualify their sounds and vary the modulations of their words, if thereby they could facilitate intercourse and render speech less liable to confusion. The set phrases in which the Chinese usually convey their thoughts, tend to enlarge this paucity of sounds, and it is easier to learn the right tones of such dissyllabic compounds than of single words.

One chief difficulty which is met at the outset in this study, is the strangeness of having a different modulation for every word. It is as if one were made to talk up and down the gamut, and apply do, re, mi, fa, sol. la, to all his words. Such delicate differences and modulations would never be retained in an alphabetic language, as is shown by the Japanese losing them in those words adopted from the Chinese; and in the Burmese, Shan and Siamese languages, where they are heard more distinctly in many words, they are not general, and cause little trouble. Practice in speaking, with careful attention at first to the right shing will soon make a habit that will gradually become easy; if the student does not learn them in this way, no rules will materially help him.

SECT. V.—OLD SOUNDS OF THE CHINESE CHARACTERS.

The Rev. Joseph Edkins has prepared this section, to explain the principles adopted by the early Chinese philologists, in spelling and writing the sounds of their language; and to give the sources from which he made out the lists of old sounds placed at the beginning of each syllable.

1. K'anghi's Dictionary.—The first source of this old pronunciation of the characters is the K'anghi Tsz'-tien, where it is registered in the most convenient way. The system of spelling therein used, called fan ts'ieh 反切, can be illustrated by the character sin 心, which is spelled sik-lim 昔林, and the reader is directed to take the initial s of the first word, and the vowel i and final m of the second, and call the word sim in the p'ing shing. Fah 乏 is spelled bong-pap 房法, to be read bap in the juh shing. Ch'eu 怵 is spelled dék-yu 直祐, to be read du in the p'ing shing. Kih 急 is spelled kü-líp 居立, to be read líp or kíp. Ma 馬 is spelled moh-hia 莫下, to be read ma. Tieh 鉄 is spelled do-kiet 徒結, to be read diet.

From these examples it is seen, how the two characters are combined in each case to indicate the sound; the first giving the initial only, the other the medial vowel, the final vowel or consonant, and the tone.

The books from which the spelling is quoted, are the Kwang Yun 廣韻, T'ang Yun 唐韻, and other works chiefly of the T'ang and Sung dynasties, in which the spelling of a thousand years ago is registered. The remaining specimens of the oldest mandarin literature date from the later Sung of Hangchau. The pronunciation of the Mongol dynasty of Yuen is known from the Bashpa monuments. A comparison shows that the modern mandarin pronunciation was then in a state of formation, and fully preserved the letter m among the finals.

The present kwan hwa cannot be taken, therefore, as a guide in reading the phonetic signs of the fan ts'ieh, but they must be derived from the values furnished by the Sanscrit alphabet, as employed in the formation of the 等韻, or Sorted Finals, a volume found among the introductions to K'anghi's Dictionary.

The thirty-six initials there used are to be read with their corresponding values in the Sanscrit alphabet, in the following manner.

見 k	溪 k'	郡 g	疑 ng
端 t	透 t'	定 d	泥 n
知 ch, t	徹 ch', t'	澄 dj, d	娘 ni
幫 p	滂 p'	並 b	明 m
非 f, p	敷 f, p'	奉 v, b	微 v, b, m
精 ts	清 ts'	從 dz	心 s	邪 z
昭 ch, ts	穿 ch', ts'	狀 dj, dz	審 sh	禪 zh
景 yy	曉 hh	喻 y	匣 h	來 l	日 j

The emperor's preface and decree following it dated 1710, should be regarded as proof that the pronunciation of Shăn Yoh 沈約 is to be taken as the standard in his dictionary. This involves three things:—1st. That the pronunciation of the old middle dialect, as still spoken in Hangchau, Suchau, and the adjoining region, furnishes the initials. 2nd. The dialects of Canton and south-western Fuhkien, and partially the old middle dialect, furnish the medial vowels and finals. 3rd. The standard of comparison for ascertaining and verifying the old pronunciation as preserved in dialects, is found in the Sanscrit alphabets and in the old dictionaries.

It should be remembered too, that Shăn Yoh, who framed the syllabic spelling with the assistance of Hindoo Budhists, lived in Kiangnan, when the court was at Nanking, and when Budhism was in its most flourishing condition. The transcription of names in Julien's "Methode" proves plainly that the thirty-six initials are to be read as in the old middle dialect, checked and verified by the Sanscrit alphabet.

In reference to the second particular, the value of the finals is known by comparing the local vocabularies of the Canton and Amoy dialects with the tonic dictionaries used by scholars in all parts of the country. For example, the 詩韻, or Poetical Rhymes, gives the finals much as they are pronounced in the south-eastern dialects, though the latter must yield when at variance with the tonic dictionaries, as being the older authority. Thus, 法 is fap or pap, not hwat as at Amoy, or fut as at Canton, or hwak as at Fuhchau.

In further elucidation of the above particulars, the usage of Japan, Corea and Cochin-China may be appealed to; for the transcription of Chinese sounds anciently made in those countries, is an index to the contemporary sounds as employed by the natives of north and south China. It may be known at once from these three transcriptions, that the true final of 法 was p and not t. From all this it can be fairly inferred that the present mandarin is as modern in its sounds as it is in its idioms and syntax. The 上平 and 下平 consist of the old 平聲 split in two; the surds and aspirates go to make up the 上平, and the sonants, liquids and nasals, the 下平. In regard to the other tones, the surds and sonants have united in the 上聲 and 去聲; and in the mandarin heard at Nanking, in the 入聲; in that spoken in the northern provinces, the 入聲 has become irregularly distributed among the other tone groups, but a critical ear can still easily recognize it, although its name is altered.

In the Canton and other dialects, the sonant initials g, d, b, have hardened into k, p, t, and are distinguished from the old surd series by tones and difference in pitch. For example, ti 帝 (formerly té) is distinguished from ti 地 (formerly dé) by tone at Canton into 帝¹ and 地², as well as change of finals into *tei*¹ and *ti*²; at Shanghai they are ti and di, the initials being changed; but in kwan hwa, both are read *ti*¹.

Method of finding the old sound of a word in K'anghi.—Look in the tables of rhymes, for the value of the phonetic signs used to spell it in the fan ts'ieh. For instance, wang 忘 is spelt with mo-pong 武方, and is to be read mong; for 武 is in the tables under the initial 遇 in the column 明 and 微 for m; and under the final tang 宕 in the column 幫 and 非 for p.

The old sound of p'ing 馮 is spelled with bé-pang 皮氷, and is to be called bang. That of kuh 骨 is spelled with ko-hot 古忽, and is called kot. In these two cases, bé 皮 is found under b in the tables of rhymes, and ko 古 under k.

The old sound of kia 駕 is spelled with kü-nya 居迓, and is to be called *ka*¹. The surd initial k is found by noticing the place of 居 under 見 in page 12 of the second series of tables of rhymes, and the final a is obtained from the position of 迓 in page 1 in the second division.

In regard to these tables of rhymes, the second and fuller series is the most useful in helping a foreigner to determine the ancient sound. The first and briefest is intended as a guide in fixing the tones, and does not give information on the final consonants, m, k, p, t. It is useful for natives who speak the kwan hwa, and require tables of sounds in a transition state from the old to the new, but foreigners should use the second series.

The second series of tables of rhymes can be consulted to determine the initial letters, whether p or b, t or d, k or g, &c.; also to discover the ancient tone, which often differs from the modern, as in dé 弟 which was at first dé, but is now nearly everywhere heard *ti*²; and lastly, to learn whether ng, n, m, k, p or t is the final consonant, although there are many irregularities in the last three finals. But for the vowels, the information given in K'anghi is not sufficient, for they have undergone greater changes than would be readily understood from the tables.

The student must not expect to find in the Tăng Yun all the words employed in the body of K'anghi in spelling sounds. These words are quoted from older dictionaries, and are too numerous to be all embraced in the tables, though quite enough of them are registered.

On the initials.—The reason that there are two groups beginning with ch, is that in some varieties of the old middle dialect, words in the first group are distinctly heard ch, ch', dj, while those of the second are heard ts, ts', dz. In certain cities, on the other hand, all are alike pronounced ch, ch', dj.

The reason that in the series under f, there is an aspirated f', is not that the old pronunciation had two *f*s, but that f came from an older p and p'. The compilers of the tables, finding that in certain dialects, both f and p existed as the initials of some characters, and f and pʿ as the initials of others, separated them in the tables. It may be that f was then the reading sound, and p, pʿ the colloquial. In modern times along the southern coasts east of Canton, the f is usually changed to h.

Initial b occurs in three places. In the p series, it is the mandarin p as applied to words whose initial was formerly b. In the sonant division of the f series, it is applied to words now having f in mandarin, but which formerly had v, and before that b. In the nasal division of the f series, it is attached to words now pronounced with w, formerly with m, and in certain dialects with b.

The existence of a double h series, is explained by the fact of a former strong and weak aspirated initial, as is still found in the old middle dialect.

The initial j or r should really be ni, as it is given in the list of old sounds subjoined.

On the finals and medial vowels.—It will be convenient for the student to write the final consonants and vowels in the margin of his copy of Kʿanghi's, Dictionary opposite the tables. In the first page headed ka 果, the first division reads ka, ka, ka, kak; the second, kia, kia, kia, kiat; the third kie, kiet; the fourth kiet or kit. In the fifteenth page, the first division is kam, kam, kam, kap; the second kiam, kiam, kiam, kiap. The southern dialects retain the old final letters, and their local vocabularies may therefore be used, to get the needed letters thus to be put in the margin.

1.—ka, kak, kia, kat, kiet, kwa, kwak, küet.
2.—keng, kʿeh, king, kik, kung, kok, küng, kiok.
3.—keng, kek, king, kik, küng, kwok.
4.—kung, kok, küng, kiok.
5.—pei, pek, ki, kit, kwʿei, kut.
6.—kai, kat, kiai, kiat, ki, kit, kwei, kwat.
7.—ku, kuk, kü, kʿok.
8.—kan, kut, kien, kiet, kwan, kwat, küen, küet.
9.—kam, kiam, kiap.
10.—tsem, kim, kip.
11.—ken, ket, kin, kit, kwan, kut, kün, küet
12.—kong, kok.
13.—kiong, kiok, kwong, kwok.
14.—kau, kok, kiau, kiok.

2.—The Kwang Yun 廣韻. This dictionary has been recently reprinted, and is readily to be obtained; it dates from the seventh century, and is one of those most commonly quoted in Kʿanghi as authority for old sounds. In it, all words having the same initial and final are placed under one heading, so that it is in fact a syllabic dictionary. The principle of arrangement is, however, tonic, all words in the pʿing shing being first registered, and then those in the shang shing, kʿü shing and juh shing, following each other in this order; those words falling under the pʿing shing are divided into two parts, owing to their number. The Kwang Yun, like other tonic dictionaries, is syllabic, though its arrangement appears to be according to the tones. The words are, of course, not placed in the order of our alphabet, but begin with tung 東, tung 冬, an order which has since been adopted with variations in some other tonic dictionaries. It seems to have been invented by the compilers of the Kwang Yun, as it is there first found. The Wu-fang Yuen Yin and the Canton Fän Yun begin with the final ien.

The sounds given as Old sounds at the head of each syllable in this Dictionary were ascertained by a skilled native, who compared each character under that syllable, one by one with the Kwang Yun. So far as the two vocabularies were found to be identical he wrote out the words. After this list was prepared, the old pronunciation was added, following chiefly the authority of the Kwang Yun. The old prounciation thus ascertained agrees in most essential points with that of Kʿanghi's Dictionary, but the variations caused by vowels are much more complex. During the formation of the present kwan hwa, the variations of the syllables became much fewer; but it is hopeless, probably, to try to restore exactly the sounds as they were used by the compilers of the Kwang Yun.

We can only draw an outline expressing the chief features. The simple syllables used by the Budhists to transcribe Sanscrit words can be correctly ascertained, but more complex syllables cannot be restored. Vowels are the most evanescent parts of words, easily become modified, and an exact orthographic representation of their nicer shades cannot be obtained. The following changes have taken place in their value:—the modern o is from a, eu from u, u from o, i from é, iau from au, ieu from u, éi from i, the imperfect vowel in sz' from i or a, i from ei or ui, ya from o, a from é or o, ă from i.

3.—Old Poetry.—Phonetics. The complete merging of f in an older p, and of h in an older k, takes us back to an age contemporaneous with the old poetry. A great narrowing of the range of the hissing letters s, z, ts, sh, &c., is a mark of the same period. At that time, ch was probably lost entirely in t, and dj in d. The researches of native scholars, and the existence of dialects like the Amoy and Swatow, without an f, and with a contracted ch and s, tend to this conclusion.

To that earlier era in the history of the Chinese language, belongs the dropping of final letters from a host of words spelled in the Kwang Yun with vowel finals only. The rhymes of the old poetry require that many words now spoken in the k'ü shing and other tones, should be read in the juh shing; which implies that such words once ended in a consonant.

In the list of old sounds, the words are arranged somewhat as they apply to the characters found under that syllable in this Dictionary, but it was impossible, without risk of confusion, to give the sound opposite each character with the Pekingese. They represent only partially the changes that have taken place in the old Chinese pronunciation, through the elision of the final consonants from words now referred to other tones. The sounds are therefore chiefly from the Kwang Yun, and not more than 1200 years old. Perhaps when the phonetic characters have been fully examined, and all the lost consonants restored, it may be possible to carry this inquiry farther, and restore the language to the form it had when the phonetic characters were made

SECT. VI.—RANGE OF DIALECTS.

The peculiar nature of the written language makes it necessary to explain the use of the word dialect, which has been objected to as not applicable to the various forms of local speech heard over this wide land. Some assert that they rise to the dignity of a language, like the Spanish, Italian, and other offshoots from the Latin; while others regard them as more like the patois heard in various parts of Spain itself, where each, amidst its local expressions, retains the idioms and laws of the Castilian. The essential unlikeness between the variations heard in speaking those alphabetical languages, and the greater discrepancies between the sounds given to the ideographic characters, will explain the wider use of the term in Chinese, but certainly does not elevate them into the rank of separate languages.

The differences between the speech heard at Canton and that at Shanghai, are indeed far greater than those between any of the local dialects heard in Spain, for they affect the idioms of the language; yet both are still so intimately connected with each other and the mandarin in the meaning and tones of their words, and laws of their syntax, that they cannot properly be called anything but dialects, although three persons speaking them are mutually unintelligible. A dialect is defined by Webster, — "The form of speech of a limited region or people, as distinguished from others nearly related to it;" and this is applicable to the Chinese dialects. It is also defined a patois, but this term as well as brogue, is far too contracted to describe the differences between the speech of Kwangtung and Kiangsu provinces. The word patois is more applicable to the varieties of a dialect, like those heard at Shanghai, Ningpo, Hangchau, and the interjacent cities, where one can generally be understood at each place, if he speaks the other vernacular correctly.

The fundamental fact, that no character has an inherent sound, has tended to make and perpetuate these dialects throughout the country; and the general ignorance of the written language by the people at large, has helped to multiply and modify them still further. It, however, entirely misleads to describe any one of these as "no mere dialectic variety of some other language, but a distinct language;" for until a new sense be given to the word, such a description conveys a misconception of the relation between the spoken and written languages. So varied are the sounds heard even in one province, as Fuhkien or Nganhwui, that if it were not for the bond of the same written medium, the people would probably long ago have crystallized into separate nations through their inability to understand each other. It is also an error to term the written language a dead language, and say, as Dr. Douglas does, that it "is not spoken in any place whatever under any form of pronunciation," and that "learned men never employ it as a means of ordinary oral communication even among themselves." The exercises in Wade's Course and the Hung Leu Măng or "Dreams of the Red Chamber," are proof enough that the kwan hwa can be, and is written and spoken like any other language. The conversation of the officials in Peking, too, can all be written in proper characters without any difficulty. No one will dispute the remark that no two Chinese pronounce their words alike, even in any one dialect; but this does not weaken the remarkable power of their written language to maintain the solidarity of the people.

The extent to which a dialect is spoken, is therefore a point varying according to one's ideas of what is a dialect; but some general notion in regard to the matter can be obtained. Native scholars give us no information on this point, for they are unable to compare local sounds by means of characters which their readers will pronounce differently; for instance, how can a man in Peking tell his readers that 外 is read ngoi^{2} at Canton, gwa' at Swatow, ngwoi^{2} at Fuhchau, and 'nga at Shanghai? The kwan hwa ought perhaps, not to be called a dialect, but rather to be regarded as the Chinese spoken language, of which the provincial speech in Canton or Fuhkien is a dialect. The fact that it is unintelligible in those cities, does not invalidate the statement, that it is understood generally in fifteen of the eighteen provinces, and is everywhere spoken by those who pretend to a polite education. Mr. Edkins regards Peking, Nanking and Ch'ingtu, as the centers of its three marked varieties, and the wide separation of these cities, whose inhabitants, as a whole, have no intercommunication with each other, and yet can orally converse, all the more proves its claim to be the Chinese spoken language.

In this wide area, the Nanking, called 南官話 and 正音 or true pronunciation, is probably the most used, and described as 通行的話, or the speech everywhere understood. The Peking, however, also known as 北官話 or 京話 is now most fashionable and courtly, and like the English spoken in London, or the French in Paris, is regarded as the accredited court language of the empire. The two most striking differences between them, consist in the change of the initial k before i and ü into ch or ts, and the distribution of words in the juh shing among the other tones. In Peking itself, words are constantly clipped in speaking, and the finals n and ng often coalesce with their next syllables, as tsien 'rh 前而 into tsi'rh; but such variations and peculiarities are endless, and do not constitute dialectical differences.

So far as is yet known, the range of mountains dividing the basins of the Min river in Fuhkien, the Pearl river in Kwangtung and others in southern China from the Yangtsz' kiang, forms the chief dividing line of a series of local dialects, in which the frequency of abrupt final consonants and nasal sounds strike the ear. Neither of the local vocabularies issued at Canton, Changchau or Fuhchau, give one any idea of the extent of country over which those dialects prevail; but probably they are not spoken in any considerable degree of purity by even one half of the inhabitants of the two provinces south of the Méi-ling. Their divergences from the general language and from each other are almost endless, but their peculiar syntax, and the limits of their use, have only been partially investigated. It is this feature of a different idiom which has attracted the attention of native philologists, and they therefore speak of the dialects of Kwangtung and Fuhkien as unlike the speech of Honan and the north.

There are four well-marked dialects in the whole province of Kwangtung, but that called the Canton dialect is probably spoken by more people than any of the others. Next to it is the Hak-ka 客家 dialect, which has its center at Kia-ying cheu, prevails in the northern and eastern part of Kwangtung, and is—owing to the wandering habits of the emigrants from that region, — said to be more widely understood. It is the usual form of Chinese heard in Borneo. The Cantonese called 白話 or plain talk by the people, is marked by the rarity of the medial i, from the kwan hwa and the Fuhkien dialects. Words like lien 連, liang 良, hia 下, kiah 甲, hioh 學, hiu 休, hiung 兄, kiai 皆, &c. become lin, léung, ka, kap, hok, yau, hing, kai, &c.; the only exception to this rule is in the final iao of the mandarin, which uniformly ends in iu, as liu for liao 了, hiu for hiao 曉. Another feature is the frequent change of aspirated words beginning with h or k, into a breathing or labial consonant; for instance, k'i 氣, hwan 歡, k'o 科, k'eu 口, k'oh, 渴, k'ang 康, &c., change into hi, fún, fo, hau, hot, hong, &c. A very few words, unaspirated in mandarin, take an aspirate in Cantonese, as hi 携 becomes kw'éi, and hoh 貉 becomes k'ok. No such alteration takes place under other initials, but there is a tendency to drop the aspirate. One feature in which this dialect, particularly around the city of Canton, corresponds to Pekingese, is the regularity with which it retains the initials ch and ts, and their affiliated sounds sz' and tsz' and the final ng, though in the intervening region of nearly two thousand miles, these initials and sounds are frequently changed, altered, and interchanged in a most perplexing manner.

In Cantonese, the initials chw, hw, h', j, lw, nw, sw, shw, tsw, and tw of the kwan hwa, and the initials d, dz, v, and z, heard along the Yangtsz', are all unknown. No word begins with dj as at Amoy, but south and east of Canton there is a tendency to add ng before words beginning with a vowel, as i 二 becomes ngi; and to substitute s for sh.

Compared with the dialects of Swatow and Amoy, the Cantonese like the kwan hwa, has no nasal sounds, nor does it ever change the initial m to b, or alter the finals n and ng into contracted nasals, as ching 貞 into ch^{n}é or chien 餞 into chw^{n}a. Unlike the dialects in Kiangsi, Chehkiang and Fuhkien, it has only one sound for a character in speaking or reading, and the number of unwritten words in the colloquial is probably not one tenth as many as at Amoy or Ningpo. This peculiarity of a reading and colloquial sound for hundreds of common characters, the two running parallel to each other something like the two sides of a railway, forms a great addition to the labor of learning to speak and read those dialects; but in Cantonese, as in Pekingese, there is nothing of the kind.

The Cantonese dialect has only 17 among its 33 finals, which make the juh shing in k, p, t. These are grouped in the Wu-fang Yuen Yin under the first four finals t'ien, jăn, lung and yang, which there have no juh shing. In the latter work, words ending in u, a, o, é, ai, and i form this tone, but in Cantonese none are heard under these six finals. For instance, the series 登 '等 凳 德 is read tăng, 'tăng, tăng', tăk, at Canton; but in the north, the series ˏ都 ˋ覩杜ˊ 突ˏ, is read ˏ*tu*, ˋ*tu*, *tu*ˊ, *tuh*ˏ, where the last word would, at Canton, be found under the series ˏ*tăn*, ˋ*tăn*, *tăn*ˊ, *tăt*ˏ. The terminations in the juh shing at Canton follow one rule. Words ending in ng, have it in k, as ˏ*king*. ˋ*king*, *king*ˊ *kik*ˏ; those ending in m have it in p, as ˏ*lam*, ˋ*lam*, *lam*ˊ, *lap*ˏ; and those in n have it in t, as ˏ*kon*, ˋ*kon*, *kon*ˊ, *kot*ˏ. This holds good at Swatow, but at Amoy they are all sounded gently, and p and t often lapse into h, as if dropping back into the mandarin. At Fuhchau they are softened to h, which prevails further north, but the k is retained, and the m vanishes.

Of all the dialects thus far examined, the Cantonese is among the most regular. No words are clipped, no character has two sounds, and the variants in the 33 finals are few in proportion to the regular sounds. Many books have been written in it by Protestant Missionaries which are easily understood by the common people. It is spoken westerly and southerly from the city even into Kwangsi, but its northerly limits are undefined; eastward the Swatow and Hakka dialects soon supplant it, though the people of Hwuichau fu 惠州府 use the Făn Wăn as the Cantonese do.

The dialect spoken in Ch'aochau fu 潮州府 (locally read Tiéchiu hu), in the eastern part of Kwangtung, and in the adjacent parts of Fuhkien, is less widely understood than the Cantonese, and is closely affiliated to the Amoy in its general character. The people of the two regions can understand each other without much difficulty. It is spoken along the coast of Hainan I., and is almost the only dialect of Chinese heard in Siam. A Cantonese, on hearing it, notices that the medial i reäppears, and that it is used perhaps rather more than in mandarin, as in *liap*ˏ 粒 for *lih*ˏ, *tiat*ˏ 姪 for chih, &c. It has many nasal sounds, and changes n and ng into such, as *k*ⁿ*é* 更 for kăng; or *tw*ⁿ*a* 壇 for tan; and often drops the final k where the Cantonese retain it. The initials b, g, chw, dj, mw, ngw, pw, are frequently heard, and indicate its affinities with the Fuhchau dialect; as the absence of sh, ts, sz', tsz' and f, show its separation from that of Canton. Of these, sh usually becomes s, sz' becomes sù, and ts becomes ch, aspirated ch' turns into t, and f is divided between h and p. No sibilant h, j, v or d, occur in this dialect, as at Shanghai.

No native vocabulary has appeared in it, but a small word-book has been published by Mr. Goddard, and a beginner's Lessons by Dr. Dean. The former, referring to the differences between the reading and colloquial sounds of characters, says that the colloquial sound accords largely with the reading, and that the two are interchanged in a great number of words; while in others, the reading sound is heard only when chanting the classics. In reading aloud, all use the colloquial sound, and hearers expect no other; and the explanations made are rather of the thought than of the words. Characters having a reading and a spoken sound, however, seem to be much less in proportion to the whole mass than in the Amoy vernacular. In the reading sounds, the nasal disappears, and there is a tendency to keep the m instead of the b, y instead of ng, y and w instead of g, and other forms of the mandarin. There are only seven tones, as is the case further east; but the k'ü shing is inflected into three modulations called shang k'ü 上去, k'ü shing 去聲, and hia k'ü 下去, of which the middle one is confined chiefly to the spoken language, as the characters thus pronounced are mostly read in the shang p'ing.

The dialect spoken at Amoy is heard throughout the two departments of Changchau 漳州 and Tsüenchau 泉州, and by the Chinese settlers in the Island of Formosa, who went from those regions. The general features of its changes are given in the 十五音 or Fifteen [Initial] Sounds, which formed the basis of Medhurst's Dictionary, though strictly applicable only to Changpu hien 漳浦縣, lying south-west of Amoy. Its spoken vocabulary is fully illustrated in Douglas' Dictionary of the Amoy Vernacular. He estimates that it is spoken by eight or ten millions of people, including its cognate variations. In the Fifteen Sounds, the reading and colloquial pronunciation of characters with the tones are carefully distinguished. The colloquial used by the people of this region differs widely from the style in which books are written, — as much perhaps as anywhere in China. They substitute other words or dissyllabic phrases for the single terms used in books, and vary the inflection of even common words; giving them a nasal or contracted ending, or changing their sound and tone altogether. The greatest part of them are earlier forms of what is now accepted as the authorized reading sound, which has gradually become assimilated to the mandarin; but some are manifestly derived from characters which have dropped out of use, and some perhaps from an older aboriginal speech. A more thorough examination of the written characters, and their gradual changes in sound, would probably detect their originals in many cases, as I have ascertained in the Canton dialect in several words.

Medhurst classifies the changes which words undergo in their finals and initials, as they pass into the colloquial of Changchau, and has given the reading sounds and colloquial enlargement of every quotation in his dictionary. This difference is so great, that a person only acquainted with the reading sound, is not able to understand a conversation in the vulgar tongue; nor can a person proficient in the latter make out the meaning of any passage recited from a book not previously familiar to him. This is in striking contrast with the more precise Cantonese, though the differences in that dialect between a phrase in the colloquial and in the terser book style are not small.

The Fuhchau dialect, which is fully illustrated in Baldwin and Maclay's Dictionary, is more circumscribed in its range than either of the preceding; it is not easily understood out of the prefecture, and is not spoken accurately beyond a radius of forty miles from the city. Comparing it with those already described, its most marked features are, the absence of the abrupt finals p and t, the universal change of the liquid finals m and n into ng, the absence of all nasal sounds, and the prevalence of initials with a medial u or w, as pwi, ngwoh, mwang, lwok, &c. over those with a medial i, as chiu, hièng, miòng, &c., though the two are constantly interchanged. The final k is heard plainly from this point northerly to Shanghai; and, as it is elsewhere in the south, is the completion of the series in the juh shing, of words ending in ng. There are several curious and peculiar anomalies in the tables of tonal finals; as ˌtăng, ˈtăng, téung', téuk,; ˌkòng, ˈkòng, kaung', kauk, &c. In comparison with the Amoy dialect, the reading and spoken sounds of the Fuhchau probably assimilate more closely. It is not difficult to write the Fuhchau vernacular in the character, so as to be read intelligibly by persons making no pretension to classical learning. This is done, as it is at Canton, by selecting characters without reference to their meaning, to express the colloquial sound; to indicate such words, the Cantonese usually prefix 口 mouth to a character, as 嘅' for place; and Fuhchau people add 人 man as 仈 to know. In the Amoy or T'iéchiu dialects, the colloquial cannot be so satisfactorily written perhaps, but even with all drawbacks, such attempts to simplify the dialect, seem to be preferable to the romanized books made in Amoy and Ningpo colloquial. These completely cut off the pupil from his native literature, and his labor is lost so far as helping him to read that, while those written in the character do much to introduce him to the knowledge of his own language, as has been proved at Canton. The total failure in India of the attempt to supplant its thirteen languages, by a uniform system of romanizing them, does not encourage one to try to supersede the Chinese character in the same way.

The speech heard throughout Chehkiang and Kiangsu shows its affinity to the kwan hwa in its grammatical idioms, absence of the finals m, p, t, and a general softness of tone, in marked contrast to the abrupt finals noticeable in Fuhkien and Kwangtung. But it is almost as unintelligible to a Peking or Sz'ch'uen man, owing to the numerous changes in the initials ch and ts, s and sh, n and y, the prevalence of b, v, dz, zz and z, and an almost unlimited variation in final vowels and nasals. Mr. Edkins has carefully traced its variations and laws over a large part of this area, in his Shanghai Grammar, and tried to show that the ancient sounds of the Chinese language are still retained in many places within the three provinces. His remarks are directed toward the search he was making after traces of the old sounds given in the Kwang Yun 廣韻 and the K'anghi Tsz'tien; but as they are applicable to the present subject, that of examining the range of dialects, I here quote them with some abridgment of details.

"Nowhere do we find such an accurate general correspondence with the tables given in K'anghi, as in the pronunciation of the central provinces. The tones are such, that the dictionary system is seen at once to apply to them accurately. The alphabetical peculiarities of the native tables are found with one or two doubtful exceptions, to be embraced throughout the following region. In the north, the thick series of consonants, g, z, &c. marking the lower series of words in tones 5—8, makes its appearance in Nan T'ungchau 南通州, a prefecture near the northern bank of the Yangtsz' River where it enters the ocean. The transition from the d, &c. heard at Shanghai to the t, &c., where the region of the northern mandarin is approached, is marked by the introduction of the aspirate. Thus 地 changes to *t'i*² from *di*², before it does to ti'. At Chinkiang, the two pronunciations are mixed; and there the five tones of the kwan hwa cross the river and extend to Nanking. All round Hangchau Bay, the two correlate series of consonants and the four-tone system, mark the colloquial; Chusan, Ningpo and Hangchau on the south, are at one with Sungkiang, Suchau and Ch'angchau on the north; and probably the whole of Chehkiang province has substantially the same speech.

"Passing west from the point where the three provinces, Fuhkien, Kiangsi and Chehkiang meet, we find that the thick consonants partially prevail in Kwangsin fu and Kiench'ang fu, near the borders of Fuhkien; but at Fuhchau fu 撫州府, a little further west, they disappear and are replaced by aspirates. Instead of *di*² 地 the people say *t'i*²; instead of sbing 病, they say sp'ing, &c., through all words beginning with k, p, t, in the lower series. The same peculiarity marks the speech of Kiaying chau in the heart of Kwangtung. At the capital of Kiangsi, the aspirates are heard only in the hia p'ing, where they should properly be; and in the other lower tones the words are distinguished from the upper tones, only by the tone, and not by a change in the initial. North of this city, on both sides of the P'oyang lake, the broad consonants occur again. Through Nganhwui, a connecting chain of dialects links the broad pronunciation of this region with the similar system extending over Chehkiang and most of Kiangsu. This line extends through Ningkwoh fu 寧國府, but does not reach the Yangtsz' River on the north, nor Hwuichau fu 徽州府 on the south; in this city two patois are heard; in one of them, two sets of tones are heard, those used in talking being distinct from those in reading, and independent of the different pronunciation of the reading and spoken sounds, which seems here to reach its maximum. In one district hereabouts, three dialects are heard, so rapidly does the speech vary. West of the P'oyang lake, the initials g, d, b, are heard around the Tungt'ing lake in Hunan, showing the same system of pronunciation as at Suchau in Kiangsu, which goes to prove that the native tables of sounds given in K'anghi are founded on what is now a provincial system. Of the three abrupt consonants, k only is heard at Shanghai; but at Fuchau 撫州 t and p are heard with their correlates m and n, but no k final; at Nank'ang fu 南康府, west of the P'oyang lake, p and m are represented, but no k or t, and the finals n and ng are confounded."

The Japanese learned their first use of Chinese characters from this region, about A. D. 250; and that language may still be quoted for many original sounds of that period; they call them Gò-on 吳音 i.e. 吳國音 "sounds of the Kingdom of Wu," and by means of their kana or syllables, have probably nearly retained the first pronunciation. For instance, 昨晚 is read saku-ban by them, while it is chòk-bwan in Amoy, and tsok-man at Canton; 詐病 is saku-biyo in one, and chá-péng and cha-ping in the other two; 作文 is saku-ban, chòk-bún and tsok-mŭn respectively. The second phrase has altered most of these three, and the 詐 appears now to have lost it juh shing and abrupt final in China. The variations in Japanese are however often so anomalous, that their pronunciation cannot now be accepted as conclusive for ancient Chinese.

As distinguished from mandarin, the Shanghai vernacular has no sh, ch or j; and changes s, sh, ch and ts, with the sibilant h, into dj, z or dz, but not uniformly; y and j easily run into n or ni; the k is retained in many words where the medial i follows it, and sometimes lengthens it, as king 經 becomes kiāng; f and w often become v, t becomes d, the final k is soft and easily confounded with the juh shing in h, and the final n often turns into a slight nasal. These few peculiarities may serve to mark the most prominent dissimilarities. The eight tones in the Shanghai dialect are divided into two series of four each as in Cantonese; but unlike that dialect, characters otherwise written with the same letters in the different tones in Canton, change their initials in the Shanghai to correspond to the tone. Thus the initials k, t, p, and kʿ, pʿ, tʿ, f, s, sz, ts, tsz, and tsʿ, tszʿ and hʿ indicate the word to be in the upper series; while g, b, d, bʾ, v, z, zz, dj, dz, l, ʾrh, m, ni, ng and n show it to be in the lower series. These distinctions are so marked, that in writing the dialect in alphabetic letters, only the shang shing and kʾü shing need to be denoted by signs. No such influence on the initial is noticeable in the southern dialects nor in mandarin, but it facilitates their distinction to a foreign student.

Attempts have been made to write the Shanghai dialect (called tʿu bak 土白 or local plain [talk]) in the character, and the success was such as to warrant the publication of a variety of religious works in it. They are not hard to learn, even by children, though the proportion of colloquial characters is greater than at Canton. It has been romanized too, and on a different plan of spelling from that used at Amoy and Ningpo; but the trial which Mr. Keith began in 1860, has not been prosecuted to any large extent.

Rev. Messrs. Pearcy and Crawford published an ingenious mode of writing this dialect, by devising a system of symbols or letters for the initials, finals, tones and aspirates, which could be neatly combined into a logotype, to denote the sound of the words. The writing somewhat resembles Corean in its general appearance, and is not difficult to learn. A few books have been printed in it, but it has never been adopted by others, and has far less to recommend it as a substitute for Chinese than the roman letters.

The Ningpo dialect has, it is said, a much greater proportion of unwritten sounds than the Shanghai, and no attempt has been made to write the colloquial in the character. The dialect in that city differs less from mandarin than the Shanghai, which is perhaps ascribable somewhat to the greater literary reputation of the region. At Ningpo, the initials z, dz and t, for s, sh, ch, hʿ, are unknown, and no final k is heard; the frequent use of the initial ni and final ò, and change of é for a, also mark the southern city. Its idioms are often unlike those heard at Shanghai, and more nearly approach the pure kwan hwa.

The differences of speech among the people in various parts of the central, western and north-western provinces have not yet been studied minutely, and cannot usefully be analysed until more data have been obtained by those living at places remote enough to form suitable stations for comparison.

The anomalies and variations in pronunciation and tones found at the points now noticed, are very great and perplexing; but better knowledge of the intermediate regions would probably enable us to classify them. For instance, the tones called shang pʿing and hia pʿing at Hankow, are just the opposite in actual sound to those so called at Tientsin; the juh shing is retained in name at the former place, but it is not perceptibly different there from the hia pʿing, while at Nanking the two are unlike. The comparisons now made are therefore imperfect,—perhaps erroneous too in some points,—and are chiefly done to point out what has been ascertained, and the nature of the diversities.

In order the better to compare these dialects now noticed, the reading sounds in eight of them, given to the characters of a portion of the Emperor Yungching's discourse on Filial Duty in the 聖諭廣訓 or Sacred Commands of Kʿanghi, are here arranged in parallel columns. The first column contains the sounds of the Wu-fang Yuen Yin; and the others have been kindly furnished by friends who are familiar with the vernacular of each place, and probably fairly represent the main peculiarities of the reading sounds over the greater part of seven provinces. It is plain from this table, that though the characters are not primarily designed to express sound, their early sounds have been wonderfully preserved by means of the binary mode of spelling brought from India twelve centuries ago.

TRANSLATION OF THE ABOVE EXTRACT.

Now filial piety is a statute of heaven, a principle of earth, and an obligation of mankind. Do you, who are void of filial piety, ever reflect on the natural affection of parents for their children? Even before you left the maternal bosom, if hungry, you could not have fed yourselves; or if cold, you could not have put on your own clothes. A father or a mother judge by the voice, or look at the features of their children, whose smiles make them joyful, or whose weeping excites their grief. When trying to walk, they leave not their steps; and when sick or in pain, they can neither sleep nor eat in comfort, in order that they may nurture and teach them. When [their children] reach man's estate, they see to their marriage, and scheme for their livelihood by a hundred plans, in which they weary their minds and spend their strength. Parental virtue is truly as limitless as high heaven!

A man who desires to recompense one in a myriad of the loving acts of his parents, must really devote to them his whole heart at home, and exert all his strength abroad. He must care well for his body and be frugal in his expenses, in order that he may diligently labor for them. To enable him to fully and filially nurture them, he must neither gamble nor get drunk, he must neither love to quarrel, nor desire to hoard wealth for the use of his wife and children. Though his manners and accomplishments may be defective, yet his heart must, at any rate, be thoroughly sincere.

Let us enlarge a little on this principle. Tsăngtsz' speaks thus respecting it:—"It is unfilial to move and act without dignity; it is unfilial to serve one's prince disloyally; it is unfilial to fill an office without reverential care; it is unfilial to act insincerely towards a friend; [and finally], to turn a coward in battle is unfilial." All these things are involved in the duty of a filial son

The same extract from the Sacred Commands has been written out in the colloquial of the same dialects, except that of the Amoy; but the example given in the Swatow will serve somewhat to illustrate it. The teachers at Amoy declared themselves unable to write their colloquial intelligibly. The colloquial characters used in one dialect are not of course understood elsewhere, for the reason that they are sounded differently, and none of them would be used by an educated native anywhere in writing even a common letter. It is, however, a difference in degree only in the Chinese, and not in kind, from what is the case in every cultivated language in the world, and its great extent is owing mostly to the peculiar nature of this written language.

The differences between the style called 文理 or book style, and 俗話 or colloquial in Chinese are not easily described; but these seven examples will help the student to perceive them, and mark the alterations good written Chinese undergoes when it is spoken in the local patois. Only in the first two columns, containing examples from Peking and Hankow, are all the characters used in their proper signification. The variety of words exhibited in these examples, is not so great as a portion of some other work would have been;—the 千字文 or Millenary Classic for instance; but this popular essay on Filial Piety suits the spirit of the colloquial better, and the benefits of this comparison do not depend on the range of sounds.

SECT. VII.—THE RADICALS.

When a foreigner commences the study of the Chinese written language, the characters appear to be so intricate and senseless, that he is liable to be discouraged at the apparently endless, wearisome task of learning so many unmeaning marks. A further examination, however, discloses both order and use; and although the study is a slow and difficult one, there are methods of prosecuting it so as greatly to reduce the labor. One of these methods is to call to the student's aid as much as possible, the principle of combination which regulates the formation of the mass of characters, and by means of which he can link together form, sound and signification. The knowledge of all these is indispensable to every one who wishes to become a Chinese scholar, and the first point,—form, is that on which he must bestow the most pains.

Early associations invest the symbols of his language with beauty as well as sense to a native, who has never learned any other mode of expressing ideas; and there are no doubt a few points in which the Chinese characters are superior to the alphabetic letters of the West. A foreigner begins by degrees to appreciate their picturesque symbolism, as he becomes familiar with them; and as sight is quicker than sound, ideas conveyed through the eye often flash on his mind with a force and distinctness superior to the slower process of sound. As no grammatical inflections are used, the unaided characters serve as pictures to imprint their meanings on the mind; and fancy helping the memory to store itself with these changing forms, each idea gradually comes to be clothed in its own appropriate embroidery. Associations of this kind between the shape of a character and its meaning, can be greatly developed by special attention, and in time will become a series of links which will facilitate their ready use. The short etymological paragraphs prefixed to many characters in this Dictionary, furnish some material in this respect, and will help the student to remember them.

An examination into the origin and changes in the Chinese characters, an account of their construction, classification, and analysis, with examples of the six styles of writing, and the development or contraction of different words, each and all offer attractive subjects for illustration, and are interesting studies to the antiquarian etymologist. Much has been written upon all these topics by Chinese philologists; and foreigners have elucidated them to some extent. A reference to the works of the latter* is all that is necessary here, and a recommendation to read them carefully. The information there given cannot be repeated here, but it will materially assist the learner of the language.

Every character may be divided, for convenience, into two parts, called the radical and the primitive. Though native etymologists have not dissected them in this way, the terms serve to distinguish the two portions; and if we except the two thousand radicals and primitives themselves, are applicable to far the largest part of the words in the language. The people never learn their characters by any dissection or classification, but depend upon their constant use to imprint them on the memory, just as we learn our numerals. Few, perhaps none, of their scholars ever learn the radicals by rote, and they are often at a loss to find a word in the dictionary. When the radical is obscure, as in 以, 業 or 罕, they depend on the list of difficult characters given in that work, to point out its proper radical.

The terms formative, determinative and key, have all also been used, because the radicals indicate the general meaning of a large portion of the characters. These names are in some respects more accurate than radical, but have not come into general use. Their number has been fixed at 214 for about four centuries; and those who selected them out of the previous collections of 544 and 360, probably deemed it necessary to reduce them to a manageable number. In doing so, the natural order yielded to the artificial, so that a few incongruous groups like those under 土, 大, 一, 儿, &c., could not be avoided.

The Rev. J. A. Gonçalves, in his Diccionario China-Portuguez, further reduced the number to 127, but this diminution has proved to be only an additional labor to all who use that book. His plan also involved an alphabetic arrangement, by which radicals having the same number of strokes, were arranged in a regular sequence. He made the letters, by taking the nine component parts of the character 永, which the Chinese regard as combining in itself all the strokes used in writing, and making them into the following series 丶一丁丿乙亅𠃌 ㇒ 乀. Characters having altogether the same number of strokes, are arranged in this system, so that their first stroke is one of these letters. Thus among characters having four strokes, 斗, 夫, 引, 廾, 中, would follow each other in this order. The last three strokes never occurring at the beginning of a character, reduces the whole practically to six letters.

In the Arte China, he has classified 1412 of the commonest characters in this manner, adding the radical to each; but the plan nearly breaks down even in this small number, and if extended to the whole language, would prove to be quite impracticable. This ingenious mode of arrangement is perfectly artificial; and in this respect inferior to that by radicals, as it hides the natural grouping which results from using them, and the student loses that important aid to learning the characters.

The native name for radicals is 字部 or Class characters; and a reference to the classified list on page 1153 will show the general groups selected as classes. The student is strongly recommended to commit them, so as to repeat them in their proper order and write them correctly, as the first thing he does. It is not necessary to learn them by their number, any more than it is the letters of an alphabet; but it is well to divide them into groups by the number of their strokes. Mr. Wade sorts them into 137 colloquial, 30 classical, and 47 obsolete radicals;—rather a fanciful division, which has reference chiefly to the very useful exercises he gives to make them familiar; the obsolete ones are nearly the same as those marked with a C in the list on pages 1151—53. A rearrangement of some groups would improve them, no doubt; and a few new radicals, as 丹 red, 束 a faggot, 桑 mulberry, or 枲 hemp, might be added; but long usage, and their adoption in K'anghi, compels one to take them as they now stand.

It appears from researches into the cuneiform language, that it also possessed something like the Chinese radicals. "Certain classes of words," says Rawlinson, speaking of the language of the Assyrians, "have a sign prefixed or suffixed to them, more commonly the former, by which their general character is indicated. The names of gods, of men, of cities, of tribes, of wild animals, of domestic animals, of metals, of months, of the points of the compass, and of dignities, are thus accompanied. The sign prefixed or suffixed may have originally represented a word, but when used in the way here spoken of, it is believed that it was not sounded, but served simply to indicate to the reader the sort of word which was placed before him. Thus a single perpendicular wedge 𒹻 indicates that the next word will be the name of a man; and a wedge preceded by two horizontal ones 𒀭𒹻 tells us to expect the appellative of a god; while other more complicated combinations are used in the remaining instances. There are ten or twelve characters of this description."—Rawlinson's Five Ancient Monarchies, Vol. I., page 270.

It may be surmised, that the use of such signs arose at a time, when the written language of the Assyrians was in a transition state between the symbolical and the alphabetic; and if they had been neighbors of the Chinese, they might have adopted the former.

Chinese philologists have looked upon the radicals chiefly as expedients to facilitate the arrangement and search for characters; and have applied their efforts rather to illustrate the composition and origin of the characters themselves. In the 說文, they are arranged in six classes, and under each class, the supposed number of characters belonging to it is stated, with much information about their origin and changes.

1. Imitative symbols or 象形 like 月 moon, 608.
2. Indicative symbols or 指事 like 三 three, 107.
3. Symbols combining ideas or 會意 like 沮 tears, 740.
4. Inverted symbols or 轉註 like 正 standing, 372.
5. Syllabic symbols or 形聲 like 鯉 a carp, 21,810.
6. Metaphoric symbols or 假借 like 心 mind, 598.

It may be inferred, therefore, that the 2425 characters comprised in five of these classes, include nearly or quite all the ancient and original characters in the language; and that it is by the combination of a radical and phonetic, that the vast majority of the words in the language have been formed. The introduction of printing and the compilation of dictionaries, have given more uniformity and certainty to the characters, and there is now no difficulty in ascertaining the correct forms. In a few cases, slight variations, as 凡 and 丸, constitute different words; in other cases, a change in the arrangement of the parts, as 帕 and 帛, makes two different words. The radicals rarely indicate the sounds of the characters placed under them, but usually refer to their meanings, and are generally quite conspicuous. Their position, contractions and interchanges, are described in the following list, in which this analysis is confined to those points which are of the most service to the student. The interchange of radicals without altering the signification of the character, as 捉 and 泥, or 徧 and 遍 &c., occurs mostly when the two are analogous. Thus, the radicals 心 heart and 石 stone would never be interchanged; but the last might naturally be altered to 玉 gem or 瓦 tile, and the first to 人 man. As a rule, the primitives interchange most frequently, but the alterations in radicals are most perplexing.

The different position of the two parts sometimes alters the meaning and sound of the word; this is seen in li 砅 to step on stones in crossing water; tăn 泵 to thump, as a vessel (a Canton word); t'oh 沰 to drip; and tsah 沓 an old form of 潺 water dashing against stones. In other cases, as in lah 猎 and yih 翊 the sounds of the characters alter by the transposition of their component parts, while their meaning, to fly, to soar, does not alter; but yih 翌 to-morrow, differs in both sound and sense. These and other changes are among the curiosities of the language.

As the characters selected for radicals, comprise only a small portion of the original characters of the language, the rest must be distributed under these radicals. When the radical constitutes an integral part of a character, as in 愛, 今, 亞, 事, &c., it is said to be in combination; for if it be taken away, the remainder has no meaning. When it is formed of a radical and a primitive, as in 倪, 訰 or 窺, the two are described as in composition.

When the radicals have been learned, it is a good practice to make them familiar by constructing sentences, such as are furnished in Wade's Course, or Williams' Easy Lessons. In doing so, the benefit of writing them repeatedly cannot be too much insisted on; for our habit, when learning western languages, to pay attention chiefly to sounds as expressing ideas, makes us soon weary in learning complex forms like the Chinese ideographs. Some persons gradually give up studying the written language, and content themselves with speaking only, and thus by degrees lose even their acquaintance with books.

In the following list, the contractions, and the C prefixed to those radicals which are used only in combination, are not inserted, as they are given in the Index list. The word primitive is here used merely with reference to the list in the next section; and the application of the remarks on each radical can be best seen, by referring to the General Index.

TABLE OF RADICALS.

Showing the position, changes and influence of each on its compounds, with an analysis of each group.

ONE STROKE.

一 1 Yih, Of this incongruous group of characters, about a dozen are primitives; this and the next seven groups contain many original forms.

丨 2 ʻ*Kwun* This radical passes through the middle of the other strokes in most of the characters, which have no similarity of meaning.

丶 3 ʻ*Chu* This radical is rather prominent; but of the characters only two are in common use.

丿 4 Pʻieh, This radical is the first stroke in nearly all its incongruous compounds, most of the common ones being primitives.

乙 5 Yih, This is usually found on the right side like a hook, as in 乳; but there is no relationship in meaning among the compounds.

亅 6 Küeh, This leads the most incongruous group in the language; it contains 予, 事 and 了, which are common primitives; in others, their little use renders the difficulty of finding them less important.

TWO STROKES.

二 7 ʻ*Rh* All the common characters are primitives; it sometimes incloses the other strokes as 亘, or is put below as in 些, or on the left as in 况.

亠 8 ʻ*Tʻeu* This radical is placed on top, as 交; it was adopted merely to group together several incongruous and early forms, as the lower half never forms another radical.

人 9 ʻ*Jän* This group, with the exception of a few primitives, as in 令 and 仄, &c., is a natural one; the compounds denote the actions, &c. of man; the radical is usually contracted on the left side, as 信; in others astride as 今; it is described as 企人邊 and 單立人, or single-stand man, to distinguish it from No. 60 彳.

儿 10 ʻ*Jän* This is placed underneath, as 兄, &c., and is distinguished from No. 16 by a separation of the strokes; its compounds are not readily recognized, the upper part being another radical in a few, or else in combination as 兎; they have no likeness of meaning.

入 11 Juh, This and No. 9 are distinguished by this being placed on top as 全, or in the middle as 兩; the meanings are incongruous, and all the common characters are primitives.

八 12 Pah, This radical is placed above as in 兼, or below as in 典; some practice is required to recognize it in the compounds, which have no common significance.

冂 13 ʻ*Kʻiung* The largest part of this group is really under its compound 曰 a cap, which being similar to 日 day, renders it difficult to distinguish 杲 and 杲; in many others, as 冓 and 冊, it is in combination.

冖 14 Mih, This radical called 禿寶蓋, or bald-precious cover, lies over the other strokes, and does not envelope them like the last; there is some relationship to its meaning in a part of the characters.

冫 15 ʻ*Ping* This is usually placed on the left, and all its compounds refer to cold, wintry, &c., forming a natural group; it is described as 兩點水 i.e. two-dot water, and several characters are interchanged with No. 85.

几 16 ʻ*Ki* This is distinguished from No. 10 儿 by its inclosing the other strokes in about half the compounds; in the rest it is underneath, or on the right.

凵 17 ʻ*Kʻan* Here the radical incloses and supports the other strokes, the opposite of No. 13; the characters have no likeness of meaning, and their place is not at first easily recognized.

刀 18 ʻ*Tao* The contracted form, called 側刀旁 knife at-side, is always placed on the right side, as in 到; but the regular form is placed below, as in 分; the group has reference to cutting, severity, and uses of weapons, forming a natural collection.

力 19 Lih, In a few cases, as 勞, this radical is put below, but it is easily distinguished from the last by not being contracted; the compounds relate to strength, fatigue, violence, &c.; several hybrid characters, as 勰, occur among them.

勹 20 ʻ*Pao* In nearly every character, pao incloses all the right side of the other strokes as 匀; they refer mostly to ideas of enveloping, bending, &c.

匕 21 ʻ*Pi* An incongruous group, both in form and meaning; the radical is usually on the right side, but sometimes on top; the most common characters are primitives.

匚 22 ʻ*Fang* The upper stroke is detached and shorter than in the next; in both groups the primitive is inclosed within the radical, which depicts a place in which things can be concealed; it is called 框欄兒 or the picket-fence; the compounds denote chests, coffers, or drawers.

匸 23 ʻ*Hi* The upper stroke in this radical projects; the compounds mostly mean to store, and many of them are in common use.

十 24 Shih, Nearly all the common characters under this radical are primitives, and it is placed in all parts; the meanings are unlike, therefore, and some practice is needed to find them.

卜 25 Puh, This radical is mostly found on top as 占, or on the right side; the group contains many ancient forms, and all partake somewhat of its meaning.

卩 26 Tsieh, This radical, when on the right side as in most cases, resembles No. 163, as in 卿; when at the bottom, it is like No. 49 as 卷; most of its common compounds are primitives.

厂 27 Han Some likeness is seen among the characters here, which refer to protection, shelter, &c.; it is known as 禿徧閃, or the bald side dodge, alluding to No. 53 广, with which it is often interchanged.

厶 28 ʻ*Sz* In this group, the radical is in combination as in 去, or repeated as in 參, and not placed uniformly; the compounds are unusual and heterogeneous.

又 29 Yiu' This occurs usually on the right side as 友, or underneath; the common characters are primitives, showing traces of its meaning, and several have 𠂇 for their radical, making many hybrid forms now obsolete.

THREE STROKES.

口 30 K'eu This is usually found on the left side; when it is at the bottom or in combination, as 合, 啓 or 咸, the character is probably an original one; it is employed to indicate that the character is used phonetically, as 咖 啡 for coffee, and many words under it in Kanghi's Dictionary are of this kind; voice, names, actions of the mouth, &c. are the general meanings; many are onomatapoetic.

口 31 Hwui In this group, the radical incloses the primitive, as 圍; the compounds mostly allude to surrounding, shutting in, &c.

土 32 T'u T'u is placed on the left or underneath; the group generally relates to things and kinds of earth; several characters are interchanged with No. 150 谷 and No. 170 阜, a few with No. 85 水 and No. 112 石; the radical is called 踢 土 邊 kicking-earth at-side, in allusion to its shape.

士 33 Sz' This has a long upper stroke, and is placed at the top as in 壽, by which it can be distinguished from the preceding; the group is incongruous, and the common words are all primitives.

夂 34 Chi' This also is found on the top, and its transverse stroke begins within the left one, which distinguishes it from the next.

夂 35 Sui The transverse stroke projects, and it is placed underneath as in 夏; the characters are mostly obsolete.

夕 36 Sih More than half these characters are formed of another radical 多, as 夠; their meanings are incongruous, though ideas of number appear in a large proportion.

大 37 Ta' This radical enters so much into combination that its compounds are rather puzzling, as 夭, and 奏; they have little affinity in meaning, and a large part are primitives; it is mostly placed on the top.

女 38 Nü Usually found on the left, as 媲, or underneath, or in combination as 妻; the group relates to females, beauty, intrigue, lewdness, &c.

子 39 Tsz' Tsz' is placed underneath and on the side; it is tripled in a few as 孱, and combined as 孝; the compounds mostly refer to children, and to scholars, learning, &c.,

宀 40 Mien This radical, called 宀 字 頭 and 寶 盖 頭, alluding to the head and shoulders of a man, and lăm pung t'au in Canton, covers the other strokes; but when they form another radical, it is not certain under which half the character is to be looked for; about twenty of the compounds are formed of 寐 contracted, as 寤, all of which refer to sleeping; with these exceptions, the meanings relate to shelter, houses, &c.

寸 41 Ts'un' In this group, which is a miscellaneous one, the radical is placed underneath or on the right; most of the common words are primitives.

小 42 Siao Nearly half of this group is formed of the character 少 as the radical, as 尠, and show traces of its meaning; the others form rather a natural assemblage of ideas.

尢 43 Wang This radical is usually on the left side, and its compounds are about equally divided between two of its forms, except 就, which is used more than all the others put together.

尸 44 Shi Except in a few old words, this radical covers the other strokes on the left; its compounds relate chiefly to the parts and secretions of the body, &c.; it is interchanged with 骨 in a few cases; about twenty characters relate to shoes, all having 尸 for their real radical.

屮 45 Ch'eh This, called 半 草 or half the grass radical, is on top, or in combination as in 屯; few of them are in use.

山 46 Shan This group is remarkably uniform in its meanings, which relate to the shape, parts, and names of mountains; shan is placed on three sides of characters, and when on top resembles No. 40 宀 a little; it is interchanged with No. 32 土 and No. 150 谷 in a few cases.

巛 47 Chw'en This radical occurs in combination as 州 or 巠, but is mostly found on top; many characters refer to streams; one name for it is 三 拐 or the three staves.

工 48 Kung All the common compounds are primitives, in which kung is found in combination, as 差, or 巨 or 巫; their meanings bear no resemblance to the radical.

己 49 Ki Ki usually occurs underneath, when it resembles No. 26, as in 卷; the three words ki 己, i 已, and sz' 巳, are often confounded in writing.

巾 50 Kin A natural group, relating to cloth, sash, flag, &c.; kin is usually found on the left or at the bottom, or in combination, as 師; in a few cases, it is interchanged with No. 120 糸; it is spoken of as 大 巾 旁 or great-napkin at-side.

干 51 Kan All the common characters in this group are primitives, and the radical is in combination, as 平 or 幸 or 年; their meanings are very unlike.

幺 52 Yao This collection contains really two radicals, 幺 and 幺, both alike in sense; 幻 and 幾 are examples; the meanings exhibit traces of their influence.

广 53 Yen The characters in this group refer to buildings, protection, &c.; in several the radical is interchanged with No. 27 厂, and always found on the left; it is called 徧 閃 or the side dodge.

廴 54 Yin This radical and No. 162 are used synonymously, but also sometimes wrongly, as 迴 for 廻, and 延 for 延, &c.; it supports the other strokes, and most of the characters relate to walking.

廾 55 Kung Kung is placed underneath; in many cases it is altered like No. 37 大, and a few words are found under both, of which 奕 and 弈 is one.

弋 56 Yih This is easily confounded with No. 62 戈, and is interchanged in a few characters; the radical is on the right, and its compounds usually refer to it.

弓 57 Kung The radical is on the left, or combined as 弟 or 弔, or underneath; the regular compounds mostly refer to its meanings, directly or figuratively.

彐 58 Kí This is placed on the top as 彘, or at the bottom as 彗; the radical influences the meanings but little; it is sometimes called 橫 山 部 overturned hill radical.

彡 59 San Most of these compounds refer to stripes, plumage, &c.; the radical is usually on the right, or in combination, as 彧.

No. 162 辶 are many synonyms; the group contains ideas of walking, advancement, &c.

FOUR STROKES.

心 61 (Sin) These characters mostly refer to the feelings, passions, mind, &c.; it is called 小心邊, or 住心邊, or 竪心旁, upright-heart side; the contracted form is always on the left as 情, and the other beneath, as 恭; the regular form is usually beneath.

戈 62 (Kwo) Kwo covers the other strokes as 或, or combines with them as 我, and then it is not so easily detected; it resembles No. 56 弋, and is interchanged with No. 18 刀 in a few cases.

戶 63 (Hu) This radical is placed over the other strokes; most of the characters refer to the uses or parts of a door, and a few are interchanged with No. 169 門.

手 64 (Sheu) The contracted form, called 才手邊 and 提手旁, is placed on the left, as 操; and the full form elsewhere, as 掌; the group is a natural one, acts and motions of the hand, ability, and power being the prominent meanings.

支 65 (Chi) This radical is never contracted, which distinguishes it from the next; there are some erroneous forms of the two following in the group, which is a miscellaneous one.

攴 66 (P'uh) The contracted form of the radical, called 昌文邊 and 反文旁 to distinguish it from the next, is on the right side, and is used in the common characters; the others (about one half of all) have the regular form, as 敍, but are seldom met.

文 67 (Wăn) The contracted form is seldom used, and the radical is placed variously; the compounds generally refer to streaks, variegated, mixed, &c.

斗 68 (Teu) Ideas of measuring, &c., run through this group, in which the radical is usually on the right or beneath; a few variants occur.

斤 69 (Kin) Ideas of division are prominent in this natural group, in which the radical is on the right side, except a few like 斧; the primitive is seldom another radical.

无 71 (Wu) The common character under this radical 既 has no likeness to it in meaning, and the rest seldom occur.

日 72 (Jih) This natural group refers to the sun, time, luminous, &c.; the radical is usually on the left, and when on top it resembles the next, as 晏; some of these latter are like others under No. 13 冂, as 最 or 冕; sometimes the next radical and No. 134 曰 are wrongly written like it.

曰 73 (Yueh) A miscellaneous group; 更 forms the real radical of several in it, and all the common characters are primitives, rendering their search difficult; a few of them properly would fall under the last radical.

月 74 (Yueh) Some reference to the moon or time is seen in most compounds under this radical, which is usually on the left; it is then like the contracted form of No. 130 肉, but practice will distinguish them; others having it on the right or at the bottom, as 期 or 有, are easily known.

木 75 (Muh) A natural group, referring to trees and fruits, wood and wooden things; the radical is usually on the left, but also at the top or bottom, and in combination, as 本 and 束.

欠 76 (K'ien) This is easily confounded with No. 66 攴, as in 欲 and 欸; it and Nos 30 日 and 149 言 have several interchangeable forms; in this group, the characters refer to the tones, condition, and force of the voice,—on the whole a natural collection.

止 77 (Chi) When this radical is on the left as 歧, there is an allusion to its meaning; but when in combination as 正 or 歸, or underneath as 武, no likeness is apparent; it is interchanged with No. 60 彳 and No. 157 足, and rarely with other radicals.

毋 80 (Wu) In this small group the radical is underneath the other strokes, as in 毒 or 每, most of the characters being primitives.

比 81 (Pi) Two radicals are here combined, of which pi heads one half as 毖; and 毚 a hare the others, as 毚; none of them are much used, but the latter are most alike.

毛 82 (Mao) Most of these characters relate to uses and state of hair, fur, or feathers; the radical is found oftenest on the left, also on the right or beneath.

氏 83 (Shi) The three primitives in this group 氏, 民 and 氐, are all found as radicals of some characters under it, which consequently show no likeness in their meanings.

气 84 (K'i) These few characters all bear some relationship to their radical, which covers the other strokes.

水 85 (Shui) Some reference to the properties or the appearance of water is found in nearly all these words, making it a natural group; several are interchanged with No. 32 土 and No. 112 石; the radical is called 三點水 or three-dot water, when placed on the left, as in 海; it is also found beneath as 汞, and more rarely in combination as 泰 or 汞.

火 86 (Hwo) This group indicates the appearance and effects of fire, &c.; the radical is called 四點脚 four-dot foot, and in most of the compounds occurs on the side, or in about one third of the whole, as 照, it is underneath.

父 88 (Fu) This small collection is very natural; fu is placed on top, and its compounds refer to a father, and his different appellations.

爻 89 (Hiao) Two primitives 爽 and 爾 are the common characters in this group, which all show slight affinity to the radical.

片 91 P'ien Some allusion to a plank, board, or parts of a house, is observed in most of these characters, whose radical is always on the left.

牙 92 Ya An unimportant, though natural group; the radical imparts some of its meaning to all under it.

牛 93 Niu The compounds refer to the ages, colors, uses, and nurture of bovine animals; the radical, called 提牛旁 or the goring ox, is placed on the left, and seldom underneath.

FIVE STROKES.

玄 95 Hüen A sacred character, and therefore seldom written with the final point; it occurs in combination in 率, one of its common derivatives.

玉 96 Yuh The complete form is only used underneath, and leads the meanings of all its compounds, which relate to gems and music: the contraction is the character 王, described as 斜玉旁 or 玉王邊; it is also interchanged with No. 112 石 and No. 167 金.

瓜 97 Kwa This radical is placed on the sides, thus helping to distinguish it from No. 87 爪; the compounds all refer to melons, gourds, &c.

甘 99 Kan There is one primitive 甚, in this group; the rest are unusual, but resemble their radical in meaning.

生 100 Shăng One primitive 產 occurs under this; in the others the radical is easily recognized, and all the compounds partake of its meaning.

用 101 Yung No bond of connection pervades the meanings of these compounds; the primitives 甫 and 甬 are the most common.

田 102 T'ien Words hereunder mostly refer to land, cultivation, &c.; it is usually on the left, and when placed above or below as 畏 or 畜, is usually a primitive, of which there are about twenty in the group; several are interchanged with No. 32 土 and others.

疋 103 P'ih The common characters in this group are primitives, as 疐 and 疑, and all are very diverse in meaning.

疒 104 Nih This is perhaps the most natural collection of characters in the language, as all refer to ailments; the radical is on top, and called 疾病頭 or disease head.

癶 105 Poh The radical is placed on top; the three common characters under it have no uniformity of meaning.

白 106 Poh In most cases, poh is placed on the left, in others on top or underneath; the meanings usually indicate brightness, light; No. 132 自 and No. 109 目 are both like it, and No. 72 日 is interchanged in a few cases.

皮 107 P'i This radical is placed variously, but is easily seen; the uses and parts of skin are the common ideas.

皿 108 Ming Some reference to the radical, called 器皿 部, or dish radical, is observed in nearly all the compounds; it is at the bottom, and in a few cases may be mistaken for No. 143 血.

矛 110 Meu This and No. 115 禾 are somewhat alike; it is placed on the left, and its compounds give the names and describe uses of lances.

矢 111 Shi A large proportion of this group indicates a connection with 短 short; the others chiefly refer to arrows, and have the radical on the left.

石 112 Shih This radical is on the left or underneath, and conveys something of its meaning to all its compounds; it is interchanged with No. 32 土 or No. 98 瓦; also with No. 96 玉 or No. 46 山 in many cases.

示 113 Shi This is placed on the left or underneath; the contracted form 礻 is not used in books, but resembles that of No. 145 衣, as in 祛 and 祜; it is hence called 禮衣旁, in allusion to this similarity; the group contains words of a religious nature.

内 114 Jeu These few characters are mostly primitives, as 禽 or 禹; they slightly resemble the radical in meaning.

禾 115 Hwo The appearance, uses, &c., of grain, especially rice, are leading ideas in these words; the radical is on the left, or in combination as 秉; several are interchanged with No. 113 示, chiefly from the use made of grain in sacrifices; it is described as 禾木旁, from its resemblance to the 75th radical.

立 117 Lih The radical is at top, or on the right, or below; several are primitives, and most of the characters allude to the radical.

SIX STROKES.

竹 118 Chuh This is on top, and called 竹花頭 or bamboo-flower top; its compounds denote the kinds and utensils of bamboo, with a few referring to writing.

米 119 Mi This is placed on the left, and occasionally elsewhere; some of the characters interchange with No. 115 禾, and nearly all refer to rice in the grain, or made into cakes, spirit, flour, &c.

糸 120 Mih This natural group relates to the kinds and modes of raising and making silk; the radical is described as 繳絲邊 or wind-silk at-side, and is usually found on the left or beneath, rarely on the right as 縣, or in combination as 蠶.

缶 121 Feu Kinds and uses of jars are the leading ideas; the radical is interchanged with No. 98 瓦 or No. 75 木; in a few cases it is often written like No. 167 金, unlike as the two are.

网 122 (Wang — This radical is on top, and called 四字部 or the letter-four radical, from the resemblance; it is also contracted as in 罕; a few like 罔 suggest Nos. 13 冂 and 14 ⺆; the meanings refer to nets and traps.

羊 123 (Yang — This is often contracted as in 羔 and 羞, or written in the old form as 羴; it is usually on the right or beneath, and several are interchanged with No. 198 鹿; the ages or colors of sheep, &c., are common meanings.

羽 124 (Yü — This conveys something of its meaning to its compounds; it is found on all sides, and in combination as 翰; several are primitives.

老 125 (Lao — Terms for age are the common meanings in this small group, but in nearly all the words the radical is contracted, as 者 or 考, so as to puzzle the beginner.

而 126 (R'h — This group is increased by many characters as 要 and 耍 which should have been properly placed under the other radical, as this one gives their sound.

耒 127 Léi — This resembles No. 115 禾; it is placed on the left, and the characters denote the uses and parts of ploughs, harrows, &c.

耳 128 (R'h — This and No. 109 目 are often written so much alike as to be confounded; its compounds mostly relate actually or figuratively to the ear; it is placed on the left, on the top, or in combination as 聚, and underneath.

聿 129 Yuh, — Placed on the right, or in combination, as in 肅, the radical adds nothing of its meaning to its common compounds.

肉 130 Juh, — The contracted form and No. 74 月 are written alike, as in 服 and 肺; but this group is the largest; and many characters like 勝, which would be searched for here, come under the other radical; those under juh have it on three sides, and the full form is usually found underneath.

臣 131 (Ch'ăn — This is placed on the left, or in combination as in 臧; an incongruous group.

自 132 Tsz' — This is easily confounded with No. 106 白, and occasionally wrongly used for it; it is mostly found on top, as in 臭, which itself is again the radical of a dozen compounds referring to putrid smells.

至 133 Chi' — This small group has no common idea running through it; the radical is underneath as 臺, or on the left.

臼 134 (Kiu — This is easily mistaken for No. 106 白; it occurs in combination as in 與 or 臾, or is placed underneath.

舌 135 Sheh, — This radical is on the left, as 舒, and the ideas of licking or sucking predominate, making it a natural though but little-used group.

舛 136 (Ch'wen — In these characters the radical is found underneath, but it does not influence their meaning.

艮 138 Kăn' — In this, the smallest group, its radical is in combination as 良, or on the right.

色 139 Seh, — The conditions of color are the leading ideas in this small group; seh is placed on the right, and must not be confounded with No. 163 邑, which resembles it.

艸 140 (Ts'ao — This radical in its contracted form on top, as in 芝, is called 草花頭 or 草字頭; it is the largest group and one of the most natural, comprising the names and condition of plants, vegetables, grasses, &c.; it is interchanged with No. 75 木 or No. 115 禾, and others.

虍 141 (Hu — This radical, or its commonest compound 虎, affects the meaning of its derivatives, which relate to tigers and leopards, showing how common they must once have been; it covers the other strokes, or is placed on the side, as 號.

血 143 Hüeh, — This resembles No. 108 皿, and is known as 血堆部 to distinguish it; the radical is mostly on the left.

行 144 (Hing — This radical incloses the primitive, as in 衙; the left half is the same as No. 60 彳; the characters relate to going or to lanes, and metaphors derived therefrom.

衣 145 (I — This radical conveys a meaning to most of its compounds; its contracted form is only on the left, as 衫, and the full form at the bottom as 裘, or divided as 裏; the contracted form of No. 113 示 resembles that of this radical.

西 146 Hia' — This radical is on top, and does not influence many of its compounds; it is ususally called 西字部 i.e. west radical, from its common derivative.

SEVEN STROKES.

見 147 Kien' — Uses of the eye, and emotions of the mind, are the principal ideas of this group, some of whose characters interchange with No. 109 目; the radical is chiefly on the right side, and sometimes underneath.

角 148 Kioh, — In this group, the uses, ages, and appearance of horns are the leading ideas; the radical is usually on the left or underneath.

言 149 (Yen — Words in this natural group express emotions, and ideas pertaining to conversation, letters, &c.; the radical is usually on the left or underneath; some characters are interchanged with No. 30 口, and a few with No. 61 心.

谷 150 Kuh, — Words in this group interchange with No. 46 山, No. 85 水 and No. 170 阜, all referring to valleys; it looks a little like No. 135 舌 when written badly.

豆 151 Teu' — This group contains two radicals, one of which leads the meaning of those referring to pulse and sacrificial vessels, as 豇 or 登; the other is a contraction of No. 207 鼓, and most of its compounds refer to drums.

豕 152 (Shi — This is interchanged with the next and No. 94 犬, all relating to wild beasts; it is found mostly on the left or underneath, and in composition, as 象; the group is natural.

豸 153 (Chai — This group is like the last, both containing many synonymous forms; chai occurs only on the left.

貝 154 Péi' — This occurs on the left or at the bottom, and in combination as 貞; the prevailing ideas in the group are of property, trade or honors, making a somewhat natural collection; the radical is sometimes called 具貝邊 from the similarity of these two characters.

赤 155 Ch'ih, Most of the characters convey some idea of redness, applied to earth or to the face; the radical is found on the left.

走 156 Tseu This radical supports the other strokes as 起, and conveys somewhat of its meaning to the compounds; they are frequently interchanged with the next and with No. 162 辶 and others; only a small proportion of the whole are now used.

身 158 Shăn This radical is on the left; it is interchanged with No. 130 肉, No. 128 耳, No. 132 自, and No. 188 骨; a small and natural group.

車 159 Ché This natural collection refers to vehicles; the radical is on the left, but in a few, as 軍, it is beneath, or as in 輿 inside.

辛 160 Sin. In many of the compounds, the radical is doubled as 辦; in others, as 辜, it is beneath or on either side; their meanings have some similarity.

辰 161 Ch'ăn As a radical or in combination, as in the common words 辱 or 農, this imparts no meaning to most of the characters under it; No. 168 長 resembles it.

辶 162 Choh, The contracted form on the left is by some called 撐船邊 poling-boat at-side, from a fancied resemblance; this and the groups under No. 170 走, No. 60 彳 and No. 157 足, all have some characters in common.

邑 163 Yih, Except in a few cases, as 邕, the contracted form of this radical, described as 雙耳朵 two-lobed ear, is placed on the right side, as in 都, by which alone its compounds are distinguished from No. 170 阜; they mostly refer to land, places, inclosures, &c.

酉 164 Yiu This is placed usually on the left, but others occur like 醫 or 酒 or 釁; the characters mostly refer to pickles or spirits, and their effects.

里 166 Li This is placed underneath, on the left, or in composition, as 重; making a miscellaneous group.

金 167 Kin This group refers to metals, their uses, shapes, &c.; the radical is usually placed on the left or underneath as 釜, it is interchanged with No. 112 石 and No. 75 木 in a few cases.

長 168 Ch'ang The contracted form is on the left side; the derivatives are little used; most of them refer to lengths, but others to hair, showing that the radical is a contraction of No. 190 髟, and not originally this one.

門 169 Măn This radical covers the primitive as in 問, forming a symmetrical group, most of which refer to doors, entrances, &c.; it is sometimes used as a contraction of No. 191 門, because it is easier to write.

隶 171 Tai These few characters are obsolete, though mostly referring to their radical, which is placed on the right side.

隹 172 Chui This stands on the right as 雅, or beneath as 雀, but in a few as 雥 or 雧 it is obscure; it is often interchanged with No. 196 鳥, and most of the words denote kinds or acts of birds.

雨 173 Yü A natural group referring to rain, dew, mist, and their times, forces, and appearances; the radical is on top, but there are many compounds as 霸 in which 雲 is the real radical.

青 174 Ts'ing This is placed on either side as in 靜 or 靖 and imparts a shade of its meaning to the compounds, and its sound too to most of them.

非 175 Fei The radical is really the primitive to a large portion of this group, the other moiety of the character imparting the meaning.

NINE STROKES.

面 176 Mien The form, condition, and expression of the face are described in this natural group; the radical is on the left or at bottom.

革 177 Keh, This is on the left or beneath, as 鞏; it is often interchanged with the next; the uses and articles of leather are described.

韋 178 Wei This is usually on the left, though 違 and a few others are exceptions; the group describes the uses, garments, &c., of leather.

韭 179 Kiu This small and unused group is incongruous in its meanings; the radical is usually beneath as 韲, and looks like No. 175 非.

音 180 Yin This imparts a shade of its meaning to nearly all its compounds; it is found on the left or beneath, as 響, and on the right.

頁 181 Yeh, The motions, parts, and appearances of the head and face are here given; the radical is usually on the right, but 顨 is an exception; it originally was a form of No. 180 首, and has nearly superseded it.

風 182 Fung Motions and effects of the wind are described in this group; the radical is found on the right, but oftener it is on the left.

飛 183 Fei The radical is the only word in common use; its compounds mostly refer to flying.

食 184 Shih, This is usually on the left as 飾, but otherwise in a few cases as 養; in some unusual characters it is interchanged with No. 130 肉, No. 119 米, and No. 30 口; the words mostly refer to sorts of food, appetite, eating, &c.

首 185 Sheu The compounds are unusual, and in several sheu is interchanged with No. 181 頁 and No. 190 髟; the radical occurs on all sides of the primitive.

香 186 Hiang The radical affects the meaning of all its compounds, which are seldom used; it is usually placed on the left.

TEN STROKES.

馬 187 Ma The characters all refer to the ages, colors, uses, &c. of horses, and metaphors taken from them.

骨 188 Kuh, This large and rather natural group describes the names and condition of bones; the radical is on the left, and is interchanged with No. 181 頁 and No. 130 肉 in a few cases.

高 189 Kao The radical is the only word in common use; nearly half of the compounds have kao for their radical, while 亳 leads the rest, and its compounds describe the condition of walls, and are now mostly found under No. 32

土; in combination it is contracted, as in 亭 or 京, and does not serve as a radical.

髟 190 Piao This group describes the condition and uses of the beard or hair; it has many interchangeable characters, and the radical is always on top; some of its real compounds are contracted under No. 168 長

鬥 191 Teu This covers the primitive as in 鬧, and is frequently written wrongly like No. 169 門, which it resembles.

鬯 192 Ch'ang The only character 鬱 in common use in this group has no reference to its meaning; and many of the compounds are duplicate forms.

鬲 193 Lih This is the radical of about half of its compounds, which mostly refer to boilers; the other radical is 鬻 a steaming vase, as in 鬻, whose derivatives refer chiefly to steaming or boiling, and gruel.

ELEVEN STROKES.

魚 195 Yü This is usually on the left, though 魯 and others are exceptions; it is also interchanged both with No. 205 黽 and No. 142 虫, but the group is unusually natural.

鳥 196 Niao In this natural group a few characters are interchanged with No. 172 隹; the radical is mostly on the right; there are many duplicate forms.

鹵 197 Lu These characters pertain to the taste and uses of salt, making a small, natural group.

鹿 198 Luh This is interchanged with No. 123 羊 in some characters; it is usually placed on top, and conveys ideas relating to cervine animals.

麥 199 Meh Characters in this group refer to cakes and other things made from wheat; few of them are in use.

麻 200 Ma Some of the characters found here ought to have been placed elsewhere, as 麾 and 麝; very few of those properly coming under this radical are used.

TWELVE STROKES.

黃 201 Hwang This is nearly an obsolete though a natural group, the shades of yellow are the leading definitions, and in this, as in a few other groups, one wonders how so many characters were needed upon such a subject.

黍 202 Shu This is usually on the left, except in 黎; in sone it is interchanged with No. 119 米; the characters mostly denote kinds of millet, paste, &c.

黑 203 Hoh Ideas of shades and combinations of black, vileness, &c., belong to this group; the radical is on the left as in 黠, or underneath as in 黨, in which cases the character appears as if belonging to No. 86 火.

黹 204 Chi This small, natural group has the radical on the left of the characters.

THIRTEEN STROKES.

黽 205 Min Several characters in the group are interchanged with No. 195 魚, No. 142 虫 and No. 213 龜; they mostly refer to reptilia.

鼎 206 Ting These few unusual words refer to tripods and braziers; the radical is generally underneath.

鼓 207 Ku This is usually found above, as 鼕, which will prevent its compounds being looked for under No. 66 攴; a few words as 鼒 really belonging to it, are found under No. 151 豆, because their right half is omitted; they denote sizes and sounds of drums.

鼠 208 Shu The names of rodents form most of these characters; it is occasionally interchanged with No. 142 虫 and No. 153 豸, though in the main a natural group.

FOURTEEN STROKES.

鼻 209 Pi Words describing the uses, forms, and diseases of the nose, &c., are comprised in this group.

齊 210 Ts'i These words derive their sound from the radical, which is properly the phonetic, and the real radical is contained within the lower part, as 齋; many similarly formed compounds are distributed among other radicals, the whole making a phonetic collection.

FIFTEEN STROKES.

齒 211 Ch'i The forms, uses, and diseases of the teeth and gums are described; a few unusual characters are interchanged with No. 92 牙 and No. 30 口.

SIXTEEN STROKES.

龍 212 Lung Like 210, many characters here should have been placed elsewhere, as only a few of those with lung refer to a dragon, which really acts as the phonetic.

龜 213 Kwéi A natural group referring to tortoises, &c.; the radical is also interchanged with No. 205 黽 and No. 142 虫, in a few instances.

SEVENTEEN STROKES.

龠 214 Yoh In this small group, several characters are interchanged with No. 76 欠 and No. 118 竹; the word 籲 is more used than all the others.

SECT. VIII.—THE PRIMITIVES.

That part of a character which is not the radical, has no name among the Chinese, but foreigners have termed it the primitive or phonetic. Neither of these names is entirely suitable, for that part of a character which is not the radical cannot always be said to have been formed first, any more than that it always imparts its sound to the united symbol. For instance, in the character 台, the combination of the radicals 口 mouth and 厶 selfish, to form the word for exalted, is etymologically speaking only apparent, since the upper half is really a contraction of 以 by, which having now lost its full form, has become simply 厶 to the learner. In this case, one half is just as much a primitive as the other, and neither of them imparts its sound to the character. Not so with the 35 derivatives in which this symbol t'ai 台 occurs, where it unites with the radicals 手 hand, 心 heart, 水 water, 冫 ice, &c. to make common words like 抬 to carry, 怡 concord, 治 to rule, 冶 to melt, &c.; for in such it is properly a primitive, in so far that in all of them it was a full character before combining with those radicals. Yet it is not strictly their phonetic; for these four are now read t'ai, i, chi and yé. Such combined words probably take their present sound from this part in rather more than one half of the total number of characters in the language, whatever they may have done in earlier times. Still it misleads the learner so often to call it the phonetic, if he looks to it to get the sound, that Marshman's term primitive is preferable. When the primitive does give its sound, as under 方 and its 33 derivatives, and was evidently taken to express it, the term phonetic is proper; and both words are useful in describing characters.

Dr. Marshman was the first who investigated the composition of Chinese characters in this manner. He made a complete classification of all those in Kanghi's Dictionary, so that their construction could be seen according to their primitives. He applied this term to that portion of a character which is left after its radical is removed; and used the word derivatives to express the compound formed by the union of a radical and a primitive. He found that the language contains 3867 of such primitives, that is, characters which combine at least once with a radical to form a third. He added the 214 radicals themselves, most of which also combine as primitives with other radicals, and thus estimated that about 4081 characters out of the 41,000 in the dictionary, should be classed as primitives. The greatest number which spring from any one is 74, but the average is less than ten.

Of this total number, he ascertained that 1726 combine only once with a radical to form a third character, and as they are all derivatives themselves, they may for all practical purposes be excluded from the list. Such a character is the derivative formed of 亠 and 龍 read chung 龕 which afterwards combines with 人 to make 龑, and with nothing else; another example is an old or erroneous form of 簪 with 心 underneath, a mere synonymous variety of itself.

There are also 452 others, formed, generally speaking, in the same manner from other derivatives, each of which produces only two philological shoots, and may be discarded for the same reason, their great rarity. These together make 2178 characters, which as they are the parents of only 2630 derivatives, and are themselves mostly included under simpler forms, can have little influence on the great mass of characters, and may all be dropped from the reckoning.

There are then about 1689 primitives in the language, from which, by the addition of 214 of their own number, are formed at least seven-eighths of all the characters in the Chinese language. This for all practical purposes is equivalent to the whole. This number of primitives can be reduced still more without injury, by striking off those whose derivatives form only three unusual characters, and those which are obsolete or synonymous, by referring them as sub-groups under their more conspicuous primitives. In describing them they may be arranged for convenience into the following five classes, according to the relation they bear to the radicals.

I.—The 214 radicals themselves, when used as primitives.—There are only 127 of them included in Callery's list, but these are of frequent occurrence. When two combine side by side, as 嗎, 坊, 視, 樝, &c., the one which imparts the sound is usually made the primitive by its location in Kanghi's Dictionary, and the character should be sought for first under the other radical. When they are placed one above the other, as 昌, 員, 李, 杳, &c., the signification of the word has mostly guided its position in the dictionary, but no rules can be laid down; most of the characters so formed are themselves primitives. Under the radical 水 water there are 117 compounds, which are made by combining it with another radical, of which 59 follow its sound, and 58 do not, or are primitives. Out of 115 similar characters under 木 wood, as many as 72 are sounded like their phonetic, and about 20 of the remainder as 棗, 杏, 呆, &c., are primitives. Out of 101 such derivatives under 艸 plants, as many as 78 retain the sound of the primitive radical. Out of the 333 derivatives of this sort under these three common radicals, only one 鴣 has the sound of the radical muh, and that is wrongly placed, seeing it is a sort of bird, and muh is really the primitive. The compilers of the dictionary were occasionally careless in this respect, and have distributed characters erroneously, according to their own rules; as for instance 斐 fine hair, is found under 非, and not under 毛 its proper radical. It is useful to know this arrangement, in order the sooner to know where to look for a character in Kanghi's Dictionary.

II.—Primitives formed of a radical, by an addition which is of itself unmeaning.—When the radicals were reduced from 544 to their present number, the compilers of the 字彙 were likely to distribute such of them as were not important enough to use as radicals, wherever they could most easily be found, without regard to their meaning. For instance, 重 and 然, are placed under 里 and 火; but the remaining strokes possess no meaning when it is removed, nor have those three characters any reference to bow, mile or fire. All such are among the most ancient and common characters in the language, and number more than four hundred in all.

Most of them are contained in the list of difficult characters given after the Index on page 1239.

III.—Primitives formed of two radicals, or which can be separated into two complete radicals.—Some which come under this class, when analysed, have only a stroke or two as one of its radicals, as 必, 丁, 千, 壬, 仄, &c.; but most of them as 尾, 吉, 如, 相, &c. are readily divisible into two common ones, and are most easily learned by remembering their component parts. A few, are composed of a radical repeated, as 多, 圭, 林, 朋, 鼎, &c., which are readily noticed. The number of both these kinds of primitives is over two hundred.

IV.—Primitives formed of three or four radicals.—They are fewer in number than the preceding, and when their radical is removed, the rest is not usually a complete character, but is divisible into two radicals. Such are 京, 聖, 質, 坐, 來, &c., which are much easier learned and remembered as integral primitives than by their component parts. About thirty characters in the language are formed by the triplication of single radicals, as 劦, 鬯, 森, 犇, 心, &c., of which only five are common primitives. The last three classes together compose about half of the 1689 primitives, and most of the elementary Chinese characters.

V.—Primitives formed from a derivative by the addition of another radical, or by the combination of two derivatives. This class is, so to speak, of the third generation, and one of its parts will therefore be found in one of the preceding classes. Thus, 忽, 易 and 昜 may all be regarded as flowing from 勿, however little connection they may have with it in meaning; and each of them is joined again to several radicals as primitives. Such is also the case with 各, 侷, and 合, whose progeny as 路, 略 and 洛, or 鶯, 常 and 敞, with 貧, 答 and 翕, and others, all combine with radicals to form new derivatives. A few of this class are composed of two derivatives, as 哥, 兢, 棘, which form a small collection easily recognized. The language contains many characters of this kind, which in classifying them by their primitives as Callery has done, must be left out; but when arranged by a radical, can be easily assorted. They are not very common indeed, as 糶, 鼙, 瀕, &c., but this dilemma of either rejecting them altogether, or making the index table too cumbersome to use, indicates the imperfection of this plan for general arrangement. What the student is most concerned with is to find a character quickly, and he soon sees that the practical point to be decided is whether to have 214 or 1689 keys to help him in his search. There can be no hesitation about the relative facilities of the two sets of determinatives for this special purpose, and that the 214 radicals demand the most careful study of the two.

This combination of a radical and primitive to form the great mass of the Chinese characters, whether the latter half is used as a mere phonetic as in 搡, or to aid the sense of the derivative, as in 駟, is such an important part of the language, that the student will derive advantage from examining the primitives to this end. The essay of Marshman, contained in his Clavis Sinica, shows the fascination that such an analysis of the characters had over him. An acquaintance with the general principles which the Chinese have followed in combining them, will doubtless assist in remembering the characters, and whatever diminishes this labor is advantageous. No one who means to read and talk Chinese can avoid the drudgery of learning its characters. I have, therefore, made an analysis of the groups found under each of the primitives given by Callery, in the belief that a careful study of it will repay the student, who wishes to become familiar with the written language.

The number of primitives in his list is 1040, or about two-thirds of the number collected by Marshman; but the derivatives from the remaining 649 are proportionately very few. Callery has defined only the most important of the words under each primitive, and the total number of characters contained in his Systema is 12,753. The highest number of derivatives is 74 under No. 285 合, of which he gives only 33; under No. 1040 龜 he gives only 9 of the 30 which actually occur; but his selection comprises all that are in common use.

The primitives of the same number of strokes are arranged in the following list under the six letters contrived by Gonçalves, and described in the last section; and if their application be learned, it will not be difficult to find each character. I have followed his order and list, because it will render reference to his work easy; but his mode of arrangement seems to have only one advantage, viz., that it shows the possibility of such an alphabetic device. If they had been arranged by their radicals, it would have rendered them more accessible. It will be easy, however, for the student to mark the number of each primitive in the general index, and that will then serve as a guide to find them by their proper radical. This list has been reprinted in Doolittle's Vocabulary, Part III., page 455–478, where the common derivatives under each are given.

LIST OF 1040 PRIMITIVES.

According to Callery's Systema Phoneticum; with the common sounds, and an analysis of the respective groups under each.

TWO STROKES.

乙 1 Yih, — Rad. 5.—The sounds under this primitive are yih, chah, wah, yah, and kiu; the characters placed under it as a radical might also be reckoned; it is a contraction, as in 礼 for 禮, and reäppears in No. 150 札 and No. 38 乞.

丂 2 K'ao — Afflatus.—This group is read k'ao and hiu; the primitive is found in No. 194 号, and perhaps also in No. 241 考; it is never used alone.

十 Shih, — Rad. 24.—This character has modified the meanings of some of its compounds, which are read shih, ki, chin and hieh.

丁 4 Ting — A man.—This phonetic gives the sound to nearly all its derivatives, the others being read chăng and ta; it is used as a contraction for No. 841 登, and No. 513 亭 flows from it.

刀 5 Tao — Rad. 18.—The half-score of characters under this are read tao, except one or two read ch'u, and their meanings are not influenced by it perceptibly; it is not the same as No. 34 刃, though the two are often written alike.

力 6 Lih, — Rad. 19.—The derivatives here are read lih and lieh or lüeh; an offshoot 劦 hieh produces a sub-group in No. 659 脅, having no affinity with it.

巳 7 Tsieh, — Rad. 26.—This resembles No. 32 己, and reäppears in No. 66 厄 and No. 267 危; the compounds are read fan, pien and yuen, and in some of them it is a contraction of No. 127 氾.

乃 8 Nai — Is.—This group is read nai, jăng and yin; there is no similarity in the meanings of the characters.

几 9 Ki — Rad. 16.—This occurs more frequently as a primitive than a radical, and is often used as a contraction for No. 856 幾; one or two are read fu and kiuh, all the others ki.

九 10 Kiu — Nine.—This and the last are easily confounded, and No. 16 丩 is interchanged in a few cases; the leading sound is kiu, the others are kwéi, kao and süh.

匕 11 Pi — Rad. 21.—From this proceeds No. 108 比, with which one of this group 北 is easily confounded; the sounds are pi, pin, tsin and yü.

人 12 Jăn — Rad. 9.—Two of the compounds, 囚 and 閃, give rise to a few derivatives; the sounds are jän, sin, shen and wo, and the significations are equally unlike.

八 13 Pah, — Rad. 12.—This is readily distinguished from the last as a primitive; the compounds are all read pa or pah except 扒 pai.

乂 14 Ngai — To regulate.—The contracted form of 五 five is written like this primitive, which is seldom met except in combination one of its derivatives is read ngai, the others i.

又 15 Yiu' — Rad. 29.—This occurs as a contraction for 田 in 叠, for 峯 in 对, and 黄 in 难; the compounds are read yiu, yu, and nih.

丩 16 Kiu — To involve.—This is occasionally interchanged with No. 10 九, and several of its compounds exhibit some affinity in meaning; they are read kiu, kiao and sheu.

卜 17 Puh, — Rad. 25.—This is sometimes interchanged with No. 869 業; its derivatives are read puh poh. fu, and wai; it is not readily confused with itself when a radical.

THREE STROKES.

亡 18 Wang — To die.—This reäppears in No. 217 亢 and No. 488 罔, and a common derivative 芒 is often interchanged with it, and regarded almost as a synonym; the sounds are wang, mang, and mung.

亏 19 Yü — In.—This is now a synonym of No. 21 于, but was originally distinguished, and in those compounds read wu, it is usually retained; others are read hwa.

干 20 Kan — Rad. 51.—The largest part of this group is read kan; others are han, ngan, hien, kien and kieh; No. 364 旱 flows from it, and it is sometimes confounded with No. 49 千 and the next.

兀 22 Wuh, — A plateau.—The sounds here are like the primitive, except 軏 yueh; their meanings are not influenced by it.

大 23 Ta' — Rad. 37.—This primitive is sometimes wrongly written like No. 72 犬 as 駄 for 馱, and also 太; its derivatives are read to, tai and ti.

丈 24 Chang' — A staff.—This character is also written 丈, partly to distinguish it from the last; the compounds all read chang, and exhibit some reference to the meaning of their phonetic.

弋 25 Yih, — Rad. 56.—This and No. 75 戈 are liable to be confounded; its compounds are mostly read yih, others being yuen and teh, the last 忒 making a sub-group.

下 26 Hia' — Below.—These few characters are read hia or sha and teh; they show no trace of the primitive in their meaning; No. 57 卞 might sometimes be taken for it.

工 27 Kung — Rad. 48.—This primitive has a large sub-group under No. 646 貢, and smaller ones under kiung 邛, No. 250 巩 and No. 384 空; its derivatives are mostly read kung and hung, then kang, kiang and kiung.

土 28 T'u — Rad. 32.—This group is read t'u, mu and shié; its characters indicate no affinity with its meaning, and one of them 杜 leads a few derivatives.

寸 29 Ts'un — Rad. 41.—This must not be confounded with the next; it is used as a contraction for 壽 by rapid penmen; its derivatives are read tsün, sheu, cheu and tao; 紂 and 守 both lead off several others.

才 30 Ts'ai — Talented.—This group contains many common words; all but one (閉 pi) are read like it, and their meanings differ greatly.

弓 31 ‹Kung Rad. 57.—This character imparts none of its meanings to its derivatives, which are read kung, and kiüng; two of them 躬 and 穹, lead sub-groups of five or six characters, and No. 156 弘 may come from it.

己 32 ‹Ki Rad. 49.—This and the next might, as primitives, be joined in one, for they are seldom accurately written; this group is read ki mostly, also pi, péi and kai; one sub-group under No. 331 忌 is large.

巳 33 ‹Sz' The tenth hour.—The characters in this group follow the phonetic, but their meanings have no likeness to it or each other.

刃 34 Jan› Sword.—This and No. 5 刀 are similar in sense, but their groups differ in sound, this being read jăn throughout; No. 332 忍 comes from this, but the form 刃 is a contraction of 創 ‹chwang.

也 35 ‹Yé Also.—This reäppears in No. 510 施, and No. 165 匜 and other sub-groups; the derivatives are read i, ti, chi, shi and to, none of them like itself either in sound or sense.

子 36 ‹Tsz' Rad. 39.—The derivatives all follow their leading sound in this group, and also show an unusual affinity with its meaning.

孑 37 Kieh› Orphan.—This is easily confounded with the last, but it is seldom met; the sounds of the derivatives are like it, but their meanings differ.

乞 38 Kih› To beg.—This primitive appears like an offshoot from No. 1 乙, but its affinities are with No. 664 氣 and the 84th radical 气, with which it is interchanged; its compounds are read hih, yih, kih, hoh, koh, kuh and kien.

屯 39 ‹To A sprout.—The sub-group under No. 210 宅 is the only important one; the compounds are read toh, cha, tsih and tu; and are unlike in sense.

千 40 ‹Ts'ien A thousand.—This and No. 20 千 are often mistaken for each other, but this is the least used; its compounds are all read ts'ien.

勺 41 Choh› A ladle.—This primitive affects the meaning of a few characters under it; their sounds are mostly choh and tih, with poh, yoh, tiao and liao; 的 and 灼 both lead two or three compounds.

夕 42 Sih› Rad. 36.—This character reäppears in a large sub-group, No. 265 多; its few unimportant compounds are read sih and to.

彡 43 ‹Shan Rad. 59.—A homophonous group, in which it is sometimes difficult to decide the office of the primitive as a radical or a phonetic.

久 44 ‹Kiu Long.—This gives its sound to all under it except 畝 liu; their meanings are various, and one 区 forms a group of three.

凡 45 Fan› All.—This and No. 49 凡 are much alike, and the next group resembles both of them; these derivatives are read fan, except one contraction 芃 pŭng.

丸 46 ‹Hwan A pill.—Its derivatives are all read hwan or wan, and some of them partake of its meaning; this and the last group are alike in form.

叉 47 Cha› Forked —The sounds of the compounds in this group are cha and chai, and the primitive evidently affects the meaning of its derivatives.

川 48 ‹Chw'en Rad. 47.—The characters in this group are read ch'wen, shun, hiün, siün and tsai, and their meanings have very little in common.

凡 49 Sin› Rapid.—This primitive is an altered form of No. 45 凡; its compounds are like it in sound except wĕi 汎, but differ in their meaning.

女 50 ‹Nü Rad. 38.—The derivatives of 女 as a primitive are read jü, but they are seldom met with, and have diverse meanings.

口 51 ‹K'eu Rad. 30.—The few characters in which this is used as a primitive are read k'eu; the groups under No. 287 如, No. 268 后 and No. 169 句 come from it, but show no affinity in sense or sound.

山 52 ‹Shan Rad. 46.—The few characters in this group are read shan or sien; most of them are in common use.

FOUR STROKES.

斗 53 ‹Teu Rad. 68.—This group is homophonous except 料 and 炓 liao; the compounds are diverse in their meanings.

方 54 ‹Fang Rad. 70.—A large and nearly homophonous group, a few only being read pang; the characters exhibit traces of the phonetic in their meanings

亢 55 ‹Hang The nape.—This character flows from No. 9 儿 only in appearance; its derivatives are read hang, kang and kăng, and some of them are like it in meaning.

文 56 ‹Wăn Rad. 67.—Some of the characters in this group are read min and lin, but more than half are wăn; one of them, No. 830 閔, leads a small sub-group.

卞 57 Pien› Agile.—This unimportant group is uniform in its sound; the phonetic is derived from No. 17 卜 and not from No. 26 下, which it resembles.

宄 58 ‹Yin Walking.—This primitive is also written 宂 or 冗, though the two characters are unlike; the sounds are chin, shăn and tan, and their meanings are very dissimilar.

火 59 ‹Hwo Rad. 86.—The compounds are all read hwo, and one or two partake of the meaning of their phonetic.

心 60 ‹Sin Rad. 61.—The sound sin or tsin pertains to all in this group, except 恥 another form of 耻 chi; the meanings have no noticeable resemblance; No. 403 忝 shows the other form of the radical.

元 61 ‹Yuen Origin.—This is easily written so as to resemble No. 55 亢, and from it flows No. 294 完; its derivatives are read yuen or wan.

井 62 ‹Tsing A well.—Some of the characters are somewhat like their phonetic in meaning; they are read tsing and kăng.

夫 63 ‹Fu A husband.—This primitive resembles No. 163 失; its compounds are homophonous throughout, and careful search might bring to light a little resemblance in their meanings to the phonetic.

云 64 ‹Yun To speak.—Three or four derivatives are read hwun, the others are yun; none of them alike in their meanings.

厄 66 Ngoh› Unfortunate.—This properly flows from No. 7 巳; it occurs again in No. 267 危 and is often written 戹; its derivatives are mostly read ngoh and ngai or yai.

仄 67 Tsieh› Oblique.—This small group presents traces of the primitive in its meanings, and is like it in sound.

反 68 ‹Fan Contrary.—This primitive resembles the last in form; its compounds are read pan and fan, and many of them partake of its leading idea of opposition.

尤 69 ʂYiu — Rad. 43.—The sounds of these compounds follow their primitive, but it has had no perceptible influence on their meaning.

亢 70 ʂKang — The forearm.—The derivatives are mostly read hung, and this primitive is often interchanged with No. 156 弘; the meanings of many of them allude to a twang or vibration.

不 71 Puh, — Not.—The sounds in this group are puh, peu, fou and péi, and the meanings of the characters show no resemblance; No. 138 丕 is often interchanged with it, and No. 308 否 is derived from it.

犬 72 ʻK'üen — Rad. 94.—This and No. 23 大 are often wrongly interchanged; this group is read k'üen and jéi; and the compound 吠 is a good example of ideographic writing.

互 73 Hu' — Mutual.—The derivatives are identical with the sounds of their phonetic, but their meanings show slight resemblance; No. 228 瓦 is sometimes wrongly written like this, and it is interchanged with 牙 in many cases.

切 74 Tsieh, — To cut off.—The sounds in this group are tsieh and tsi, both which the phonetic has; the meanings are very unlike.

戈 75 ʻKwo — Rad. 62.—As a primitive, this gives none of its meaning to the compounds, which are read hwa, chao, hwan and hwo; No. 437 戛 flows from it.

牙 76 ʻYa — Rad. 92.—The compounds in this group mostly follow their leading sound; others are read hia, kia and chwen; No. 424 亞 is interchanged with it in several characters.

市 77 Féi' — A short dress.—This and shi' 市 a market, are nearly alike in form, but this is the phonetic, and half the compounds follow it; others are read pei and tseh; the sub-group of five under 市 is read shi.

支 78 ʻChi — Rad. 65.—The group under this as a primitive is more important than that under it as a radical, and it is not easy to draw the line; the sounds are chi and ki in equal proportions, with three read kwéi.

丏 79 Mien' — Obscure.—This resembles 丐; its compounds follow its sound, and in several of them 面 takes its place from mere identity of sound.

木 80 Muh, — Rad. 75.—The few compounds under this primitive are read muh, hiu, hiao and sung, of which No. 278 休 and 梟 form sub-groups.

子 81 Yü' — To give.—This group is read yü, sü, shu, chu and yé; in combination the primitive is often written like No. 36 孑; and one or two of the compounds have a few derivatives.

引 82 ʻYin — To lead on.—The compounds under this character partake slightly of its meanings; their sounds are yin, shän and chän.

丑 83 ʻCh'eu — The second hour.—The derivatives are read ch'eu and niu; their meanings show no similarity to it or each other.

夬 84 Kwai' — A chord.—This often occurs written 支 in obsolete forms, and resembles No. 200 央; the compounds are read kwai, küéh, h'üeh, yüeh and méi, a miscellaneous group.

歹 85 Muh, — Not.—This character is easily confounded with No. 103 歹, but it seldom occurs in combination; its sounds are all like the primitive.

巴 86 ʻPa — Would that.—This group regularly follows its phonetic throughout; the compounds show no resemblance in signification to it or each other.

乏 87 Fah, — Deficient.—The sounds under this primitive, which resembles 之, are fah, fan and pien; their meanings are still more diverse.

毛 88 ʂMao — Rad. 82.—This group is read mao, with the exception of three read hao and muh; the meanings of the characters are unlike.

午 89 ʻWu — Noon.—The compounds are read wu, ch'u and hü; one of them 許 leads off three or four in a sub-group.

牛 90 ʂNiu — Rad. 93.—The few words in this group are read niu, lao and kien; they have no similarity of meaning.

夭 91 ʻYao — Fair.—This primitive resembles 天 heaven, but that forms no derivatives; its sounds are yao, ngao, hiao, yu and uh; one 芙 leads a small sub-group.

攵 92 Puh, — Rad. 66.—The forms of the radical and primitive differ a little, but this resembles No. 78 支 in some cases; the derivatives are read muh, méi.

丹 93 ʻTan — Cinnabar.—The primitive gives its sound to five compounds, the rest being read chen, nan, and tung; it might have itself been elevated to be a radical.

勻 94 ʂYun — Uniform.—An unusual similarity runs through the meanings of this group, which is read yun, kiun and tsin; one derivative 均 has three under it.

月 95 Yüeh, — Rad. 74.—This gives its sound to all its derivatives, and traces of its meanings can be detected in two or three.

勿 96 Wuh, — Do not.—The sounds in this group are wuh, hwuh, muh and wän; from one of the characters proceeds No. 466 忽, and there are other small sub-groups.

及 97 Kih, — Up to.—About half of this group is read kih; the rest are chah, hih and sah, suggesting a contraction from other forms to explain the sounds.

欠 98 K'ien' — Rad. 76.—The sounds of k'ien, lien, kan, yin and chui, occur in this group; in many of the characters, it is not easy to decide whether 欠 is the radical or primitive.

斤 99 ʻKin — Rad. 69.—No similarity in meaning is seen in these derivatives, which are read kin, hin, yin, k'i, tsiang and so.

升 100 ʻShing — To ascend.—These compounds resemble their primitive in sound and sense; and one of them 陞 is often substituted for it.

戶 101 Hu' — Rad. 63.—More than usual uniformity appears among the derivatives, most of them being read hu, with ku and tu; No. 769 扈 is derived from it, and 雇 and 扉 both have a few followers.

爪 102 ʻChao — Rad. 87.—The compounds are similar to the primitive in sound, and some of them partake of its sense.

殳 103 ʂShu — Rad. 79.—This primitive is a little like No. 85 殳; the derivatives are read sheh, shuu, teu, ku and yih, and show a few sub-groups; some of the compounds properly belong to the radical.

屯 104 ʂT'un — To sprout.—Half of the derivatives are read tun; others are chwen, tsüen and shun; there are two or three small sub-groups.

化 105 Hwa' — To transform.—The compounds of this group are read hwa and wo, and several of them are modified by the meaning of the primitive.

氏 106 Shi' — Rad. 83.—The sounds vary much among these derivatives, but their meanings are even more dissimilar; it is not the same as No. 174 氐.

卯 107 ʂAng — To look up.—This is not the same as No. 175 卯; the sounds are ang, ying and yang, and the sense of the primitive appears in many of the compounds.

比 108 ˊPi — Rad. 81.—This primitive comes from No. 11 匕, and gives its sound to all under it, but no trace of its meaning; No. 354 毕 and No. 685 鼻 are connected with it.

凶 109 ˊHiüng — Cruel.—Some likeness of sound appears in this group; it is sometimes written 匈 and 匈 or 匂.

今 110 ˊKin — Now.—The compounds are read kin and king, but none of them follow the meaning of the phonetic.

兮 111 ˋHi — Sign of admiration.—This and the next are easily distinguished; the group is small, and nearly uniform in sound.

分 112 ˋFăn — To divide.—The idea of expansion or division runs through the words in this large group, two-thirds of which follow the sound of the primitive; the rest are păn, pan and pin.

介 113 Kiaiˋ — Confines.—Much uniformity in sound, as kiai and hiai pervades this group, but only a few of its words resemble the primitive in sense.

父 114 Fuˋ — Rad. 88.—No trace of the meaning of the primitive is seen in the compounds, but all of them agree with it in sound; 釜 is an example of a modified radical.

爻 115 ˋHiao — Rad. 89.—This group is nearly uniform in sound; the primitive affects the meanings of only one or two.

公 116 ˊKung — Equal.—The sounds of these compounds are unlike, and in many cases they follow No. 434 枞, with which some are interchanged.

允 117 ˊYun — To permit.—Much dissimilarity in pronunciation occurs in this group, and the meanings have no reference to the primitive.

爿 118 ˋChw'ang — Rad. 90.—This rules the sounds of only a part of the compounds, the rest being tsiang; and imparts its meaning to none.

止 119 ˊChi — Rad. 77.—This group agrees in sound with its phonetic, and a trace of its meaning is seen in several of the compounds.

日 120 Jihˌ — Rad. 72.—An incongruous group in both sound and signification; 馹 is regarded as a contraction of 驛 by many.

内 121 Néiˋ — Within.—This imparts its own sound to none of the compounds, which read noh, or *jui*ˋ or *noh*ˌ; nor are their meanings like it.

中 122 ˊChung — Middle.—This gives the sound to all its compounds, and traces of its meaning appear in all the common ones.

FIVE STROKES.

宁 124 ˊChu — A vestibule.—One sound runs through this group, but its meanings are incongruous; it is contracted to 宀 in some characters.

宅 125 ˊT'o — To carry on the back.—A group nearly uniform in sound, but diverse in its meanings; some of them are interchanged with No. 35 也.

穴 126 Hüehˌ — Rad. 116.—A trace of the meaning of the primitive appears in many of the compounds, most of which are like it in sound.

汎 127 Fanˋ — Waves rising.—This is derived from No. 7 巳, but while the sounds are alike, the meanings of the derivatives show no affinity with it.

立 128 Lihˌ — Rad. 117.—An incongruous group in sound, as lih, lah, sah; and their meanings show even more diversity.

主 129 ˊChu — Lord.—A group uniform in sound, and one where the sense of many characters shows the influence of the primitive; 往 is another form of 𠂇, which is found under No. 65 王, from which this flows.

玄 130 ˋHuen — Rad. 95.—This affects the sounds of all its compounds; which are more numerous and common than those in which it is a radical.

永 131 ˊYung — Always.—The sounds in this group are nearly uniform, but their meanings show no trace of the primitive.

必 132 Pihˌ — Must.—This leads the sounds as pi or pih; and No. 708 密 heads a sub-group of one of its derivatives.

平 133 ˋP'ing — Peace.—The sounds in this group are p'ing and păng; the meanings are various; 秤 is nearly the same as 稱 ˋch'ing.

未 134 Wèiˋ — Not yet.—This and the next need to be distinguished; its sounds are wi or méi, and its meanings often indicate incompleteness.

末 135 Muhˌ — End.—The sounds here are uniform, and there is a trace of the primitive in the meanings of most of the words.

左 136 ˊTso — The left.—This gives its sound to the group; No. 522 有 and No. 629 差 flow from it.

发 137 Pahˌ — To pull out.—The sounds of pah or poh, fah or fuh are common in this group, whose characters have no reference to the primitive in their meanings.

丕 138 ˊP'éi — Great.—This is a derivative from No. 71 不; its sounds follow the primitive, but not its meanings.

右 139 Yiuˋ — Right.—This has some affinity to No. 231 有 in sound and form; its derivatives are all sounded alike.

石 140 Shihˌ — Rad. 112.—This group has no reference in meaning to the primitive, and the sounds are very unlike.

布 141 Puˋ — Cloth.—These characters agree in sound, and 飾 is modified in its form, and may be of a different origin.

正 142 Chingˋ — Correct.—Uniform in sound; only a few of the characters indicate affinity with the meaning of the primitive, which seems to proceed from No. 119 止.

去 143 K'üˋ — To depart.—These characters are read k'ü, kieh and fah; the primitive influences the meaning of very few of them.

巨 144 Küˋ — Vast.—A group nearly uniform in sound, but various in its meanings; it resembles No. 248 臣 and the radical 臣 in form.

丙 146 ˊPing — Cyclic term.—No similarity in meaning appears in this group, but all follow it in their sounds.

匝 147 Tsahˌ — To bind.—The sounds of this group are uniformly like their phonetic; it is often contracted to 帀.

朮 148 Shuhˌ — A medicine.—The meaning of the primitive affects none of the compounds, but their sounds chuh and shuh resemble it.

本 149 ˊPăn — Origin.—These characters mostly denote rudeness; they are read păn and poh, and No. 528 奔 is probably derived from it.

札 150 Chahˌ — A tablet.—The sounds of this group are uniform, but their meanings have no similarity.

甘 151 ˊKan — Rad. 99.—The pronunciation is kan, han and kien; and a trace of the meaning of the primitive is observable in this group.

世 152 Shi — The age.—The sounds here are shi, i and sieh; their significations vary much; it is sometimes interchanged with No. 289 曳, and No. 542 枼 is an offshoot.

古 153 Ku — Ancient.—This group is read ku and hu, but their meanings differ widely; No. 497 固 and No. 544 胡 are derived from it.

戊 154 Yueh — An ax.—This group is similar in its sounds, but not otherwise; the primitive must not be written like 戊 a cyclic character.

弗 155 Fuh — Not so.—The sounds here are fuh and féi, but no likeness to the primitive can be traced in their meanings.

弘 156 Hung — To extend.—The primitive gives its sound to the compounds; it is perhaps derived from No. 31 弓.

尼 157 Ni — A nun.—The sounds here follow the primitive; the meanings are incongruous.

司 158 Sz' — An official.—One sound pervades this group, which yet exhibits no likeness in its meanings; 嗣 is a hybrid.

民 159 Min — The people.—Uniform in sound, with the exception of 眠 mien; in some of the compounds 昏 is improperly interchanged with it.

召 160 Chao — To call.—The compounds are read tiao, choo and shao; their meanings are diverse; it is contracted to 刁 in some cases.

加 161 Kia — To add.—The sounds in this group are kia, with a few ho and kié; the meanings however show few traces of its meaning.

乎 162 Hu — Ah!—The sounds follow the primitive, which itself recurs in No. 784 虖 in a small group.

生 164 Shăng — Rad. 100.—More resemblance exists in this group to the sound than the sense of the primitive; No. 595 is one of them.

乜 165 I — Mountaineer.—This is derived from No. 35 也; the characters are read t'o and i, and few of them are common.

乍 166 Cha — Suddenly.—The primitive gives its sound to nearly half the group, the rest being tsoh, tsieh and tsu; No. 611 窄 is one of its compounds.

禾 167 Hwo — Rad. 115.—The characters, not like the primitive in their sounds, are read su; their meanings are all unlike it.

包 168 Pao — To embrace in.—Much uniformity of sound appears in this group; many characters resemble the primitive in sense.

句 169 Kü — A phrase.—The compounds are read kü, keu and heu or hü; it is sometimes written 勾, but not correctly.

皮 170 P'i — Rad. 107.—Besides the regular sound p'i, a few are read po, or péi; the meaning of skin appears in only three or four.

斥 171 Cheh — To reprimand.—The sounds of this group are cheh, su and toh; several of them refer to breaking; it has no affinity with No. 99 斤.

瓜 172 Kwa — Rad. 97.—Words in this group are read kwa, ku or hu, but none of them relate to melons.

冬 173 Tung — Winter.—The sounds in this group are tung, t'ang and chung, and a few of the characters refer to cold.

氐 174 Ti — Bottom.—About half of these derivatives are read ti, and the rest chi; in some of the latter 至 is interchanged with 氐 the primitive, which is not the same as No. 106. 氐.

卯 175 Mao — Morning hour.—This group is read mao, liao and liu; its significations are incongruous; 卵 an egg is aberrant, and No. 673 留 leads a large group.

代 176 Tai — An age.—These sounds are uniform, and a trace of the primitive is seen in several of the compounds.

丘 177 K'iu — A hill.—This group is mostly read like the primitive, but few of them show its influence in their meaning.

付 178 Fu — To give.—This is uniformly sounded fu, and in many of the compounds something of the primitive is apparent.

白 179 Poh — Rad. 106.—All except three read pa, follow the primitive in their pronunciation; only two or three resemble its meaning.

禾 180 Tsz' — To stop one's-self.—The sounds are nearly uniform in this group; it is sometimes confounded with No. 301 弟.

半 181 Pan — Half.—The primitive imparts its sound to all the derivatives, and its meaning to a large proportion.

令 182 Ling — To order.—A uniform group; the primitive is sometimes used as a contraction of No. 1040 靈.

彡 183 Chăn — Thick hair.—All the compounds but two follow its sound, but only one or two of them its meaning; No. 780 參 comes from it.

谷 184 Yuen — A marsh.—These characters differ in sound and sense from the primitive, which is also written 谷.

弁 185 Pien — A casque.—Half of this group is pronounced pien and half is fan; the primitive is sometimes written 弃, but not correctly.

台 186 Tai — A terrace.—A variety of sounds as i, tai, chi, si, ye and shi occur in this group; it is often a contraction of No. 945 臺, in those read tai.

毋 187 Mu — Mother.—An incongruous group, for part of them are compounded of the radical 毋 not, and part of 毋 to string on; No. 340 每 flows from it.

奴 188 Nu — A slave.—The sounds here vary from nu into nao, na and t'ang; there is no similarity in sense among the derivatives.

幼 189 Yeu — Young.—The sounds here are nearly uniformly yeu or yao, but their meanings do not resemble the phonetic.

占 190 Chen — To divine.—Among its compounds some are read nien, tien, tieh and shen; one of them is No. 387. 沾 making a sub-group; it and No. 153 古 are often misprinted for each other.

此 191 Ts'z' — This.—A few are read chai, but the other derivatives are uniform in sound with it.

旦 192 Tan — The dawn.—About half a dozen of this group are read tah; in some the primitive is often contracted to No. 901 詹, because of the sameness of sound.

且 193 Tsié — Furthermore.—This much resembles the last; the sounds tsü, cha, chu, tsu and tsié occur under it; No. 370 助 flows from it.

甲 195 Kiah — A scale.—The compounds are read kiah, hiah, chah or yah; they show no trace of the primitive in their meanings.

另 197 Kwa — To scrape off.—This small group is incongruous, and the primitive is often written 另 erroneously.

兄 198 ˊHiūng — Elder brother.—None of the compounds are read like it, and none of them exhibit any traces of its meaning.

只 199 ˊChi — Only.—All the compounds are read like it, but their meanings vary much.

央 200 ˊYang — Middle.—Most of these follow the primitive in sound; four are read ying, and one derivative No. 588 英 leads a group.

田 201 ˊT'ien — Rad. 102.—All but one of this group are read like it, and they all refer more or less to its meaning.

由 202 ˊYiu — From, by.—This group is read siu, chu, tih, cheu and yiu, but in none does the meaning of the primitive appear.

冉 203 ˋYen — Gradually.—One sound runs through this group, but nothing of the primitive comes out in the meanings.

册 204 Tsiehˋ — Catalogue.—Shan is the most common sound in these few characters, which are incongruous in meaning.

四 205 Szˋ — Four.—A similarity of sound pervades this group; the primitive is often printed to resemble 匹 a piece.

回 206 ˊKiūng — A desert.—All these are read nearly alike, and in a large part there is some allusion to space; No. 291 回 and No. 293 同 are like it.

出 207 Ch'uhˋ — To go out.—Besides ch'uh, the sounds kiüh, tuh and choh occur; the meanings are very diverse.

SIX STROKES.

字 209 Tszˋ — A letter.—The sounds here are uniform, but the characters do not take after the primitive, itself derived from No. 36 子.

宅 210 Cheˋ — A house.—These compounds are read ch'a, but they are not uniform in meaning; it is itself derived from No. 39 乇.

安 211 ˊNgan — Peace.—Nearly uniform in sound; the primitive is parted in 宴 to feast with.

亦 212 Yihˋ — Also.—Usually read yih, but none of the compounds resemble it in meaning; No. 1024 糸 is often contracted to this, especially in these characters where it is placed over the radical.

衣 213 ˊI — Rad. 145.—Uniformly read i, but nothing of its signification appears in the compounds.

交 214 ˊKiao — To join.—The sounds hiao and yao occur in a few cases, and a trace of the primitive is often seen in the derivatives.

充 215 ˊCh'ung — To fill.—The sounds here are uniform, with one exception; it is often written 克 in formal books.

亥 216 Haiˋ — The tenth hour.—This group is read kai, hiai, kiai, koh and hai, but the primitive affects none of the meanings.

荒 217 ˊHwang — Ample.—These follow one sound, and traces of the primitive reappear in some of the compounds; it flows from No. 18 亡 and 荒 makes another form of it.

羊 218 ˊYang — Rad. 123.—Besides yang, many of these are read siang, and three or four of them refer to the primitive.

㚔 219 ˊKüen — This group is uniformly read küen; the primitive is not in use, and reappears in No. 453 卷 and No. 666 朕; it was anciently a radical.

次 221 ˊTsz' — A series.—These all follow the sounds of the phonetic, and No. 578 咨 is a compound which leads a few others.

刑 222 ˊHing — Punishment.—This group is uniform in sound, but has none in signification; it is perhaps derived from No. 62 井.

匡 223 ˊKw'ang — To aid.—One sound runs through all these characters, and some of them slightly indicate the meaning of the primitive.

戎 224 ˊJung — Martial.—A few of these are read sung; one derivative 賊 forms two further compounds itself; No. 154 戚, No. 233 成, and No. 235 戌 are easily confounded with it.

式 225 Shehˋ — A model.—These generally follow their primitive in sound, but it does not influence their meanings.

夷 226 ˊI — A foreigner.—This group is read i and t'i; the phonetic is sometimes wrongly interchanged with 弟 No. 301.

灰 227 ˊHwui — Ashes.—The sounds here are hwui, kwei and tan; a few show something of the primitive in their meaning.

亙 228 Kängˋ — Constant.—Two of these are read hăng; the primitive is sometimes written like No. 73 㠯 and No. 245 亘, but there is a clear distinction between them.

列 229 Liehˋ — To arrange.—The sounds are lieh and li, but none of the compounds show much trace of the primitive.

百 230 Pohˋ — A hundred.—This group is read poh and moh, and in one or two some influence of the phonetic appears.

有 231 ˋYiu — To have.—Besides yiu, others are read hwui, wéi and yü; a few show traces of the meaning of the primitive.

而 232 ˊR'h — Rad. 126.—Most of the sounds are 'rh, nai or nuh, being aberrant; from it flow No. 527 耍 and No. 936 需, two small groups.

成 233 ˊCh'ing — To complete.—Two are read shing, as exceptions to ch'ing; their meanings sometimes partake of its own; it is not the same as No. 224 戎 or No. 235 戌.

存 234 ˊTs'un — To preserve.—About half are read tsien and ts'un; none exhibit any decided trace of the primitive in their meanings.

戌 235 Sühˋ — The eighth hour.—This primitive is not to be written 戌 which nearly resembles it; the sounds are incongruous.

夸 236 ˊKw'a — To brag.—With kw'a, the sounds of k'u and hu also occur; in many compounds some ideas of bragging or grandeur are noticed.

至 237 Chiˋ — Rad. 133.—Half a dozen words are read tieh; the others are chi, but their meanings are dissimilar.

耳 238 ˋR'h — Rad. 128.—The sounds in this group are 'rh or ni; few of them relate to the meaning of the phonetic.

圭 239 ˊKwéi — A baton.—Much diversity of sound exists here, as kwa, wa, kwéi, hiai and kiai; No. 421 卦 is derived from it.

寺 240 Szˋ — A temple.—In this group all differ from the primitive, the sounds shi, chi, t'ang and tai being common; No. 697 時 flows from it.

考 241 ˋK'ao — To examine.—A small uniformly-sounded group, but with very dissimilar meanings.

戋 242 ˊTsai — To wound.—All but one are read tsai; the primitive is not in use, but most of the compounds show traces of its meaning.

吉 243 Kihˋ — Fortunate.—Modifications of the sound kih, as kieh, kieh, kiah and kiuh, occur in this group, which is very incongruous.

老 244 ʻLao — Rad. 125.—Most of these are uniform in sound, but have no common bond in their meaning.

亘 245 ʻSüen — To publish.—The sounds hwan and yuen prevail under this primitive, which is much like No. 228 亙 and flows into No. 503 宣.

吏 246 Lì — An official.—The compounds are read shi, and have apparently got their sounds from 史 a history.

西 247 ʻSi — Rad. 146.—This is also used as a contraction of 麗 in 洒 and 晒 and others; the sounds are si, shai, tsien and shin.

臣 248 ʻI — The chin.—These are sounded i, with one exception, but their meanings vary much; it differs from 臣 a statesman.

束 249 ʂTʻsz' — A thorn.—Besides tsz' the sounds tsieh or shih occur; this is liable to be confounded with its derivative No. 323 束, and the two are often miswritten.

巩 250 ʻKʻung — Within.—Two of this group are read kʻüng, but their meanings indicate nothing of the primitive; a sub-group appears in No. 836 筑.

共 251 Kung' — Altogether.—Those not read kung, are read hung, and a few exhibit traces of the signification of the phonetic.

聿 252 Yuh, — Rad. 129.—Most of these are read lüh; others are tsin, pih and yuh, and their meanings are equally diverse; No. 569 律 is a sub-group.

艮 253 Kăn' — Rad. 138.—In this group kan runs into hăn, yin, yen and hʻien; one derivative No. 300 艮 gives rise to others, as No. 624 郎.

羽 254 ʻYü — Rad. 124.—The sounds in this small group change from the primitive into hü and i; No. 948 翟 heads a large sub-group.

丞 255 ʻChʻing — To aid.—A group uniform in sound, and from one of the compounds comes No. 660 烝; the character 承 is much like it.

劫 256 Kieh, — To separate.—The sounds are mostly kieh, kiah and yeh; the primitive alters a little in composition; two sub-groups, No. 567 契 and No. 809 絜 are important.

耒 257 Léi' — Rad. 127.—Uniform in sound, this group is diverse in meaning; No. 409 來 is often contracted like it.

缶 258 ʻFeu — Rad. 121.—All but one, sie, read like the primitive, which also gives its meaning to one or two derivatives.

朱 259 ʻChu — Red.—In a few words chu runs into shu, but the group is nearly homophonous, and several show traces of its meaning.

先 260 ʻSien — First.—Considerable diversity of sound exists in this group, as si and shăng are applied even to the same character.

幵 261 ʻKien — Equally.—The sound kien runs into yen, hing and ki; it is often contracted to 开, and the contraction of No. 435 其 is 亓, which is sometimes confounded with it.

舌 262 Sheh, — Rad. 135.—The sounds kwah, kwa, koh, hoh and tien, show the variations in this group; the meanings are very diverse.

朵 263 ʻTŏ — A bouquet.—Uniform in sound, this group shows no similiarity in its meanings; 朵 is another form of it.

旬 264 Sün — A decade.—A few of these read hʻün for sün, and the primitive is occasionally written as No. 359 夋 and No. 565 盾 from likeness of sound; 旬 leads a few other derivatives.

多 265 ʻTo — Many.—The sounds to, ché and i are heard in these compounds, which are unlike the primitive in meaning; it is also used as a radical under 夕 the evening.

名 266 ʻMing — Name.—This group is uniform in sound, while the significations indicate no affinity with the phonetic in meaning.

危 267 ʂWéi — Dangerous.—The sound wéi alters into kwéi in most of the characters, some of which resemble it in meaning.

后 268 Heu' — Empress.—Heu and keu are the sounds in this group, but none of them show the sense of the primitive.

辰 269 Pʻai' — Rivulet.—Pai, mih and moh are the sounds; the meanings show little likeness to the primitive, which is altered to No. 131 永 in badly-written characters.

行 270 ʂHing — Rad. 144.—The compounds are read hăng, but few of them show any traces of its meaning.

夅 271 Kiang' — To descend upon.—The sound kiang varies into hiang, hung and pang; the primitive is not used alone, and differs from No. 348 夆 slightly.

各 272 Koh, — Each.—The most part of this group is read loh, then hoh, koh, lioh and lu; from it flows No. 504 客 and No. 865 路.

舟 273 ʻCheu — Rad. 137.—All the compounds read like their phonetic, but none of them have its meaning.

兆 274 Chaò — A sign.—The sounds yao, tiao, tao, chao and fu are found here, but the meaning of the primitive does not appear.

旨 275 ʻChi — Will.—These are read i and chi, but their meanings show no reference to it.

伏 276 Fuh, — To prostrate.—These are uniform in sound, but not in sense; it is easily distinguished from No. 278 休 and No. 72 犬, from which it flows.

伐 277 Fah, — To fight.—All agree with their phonetic in sound at least; it must be distinguished from No. 176 代 and No. 345 我

休 278 ʻHiu — To desist.—The sounds are uniform in this group; one of the compounds 烋 is sometimes used for itself.

伊 279 ʻI — He.—A small group, uniform in sound, but diverse in meaning; the right half is used also as a synonymous form.

向 280 Hiang' — Towards.—Hiang runs into shang in some of these; it is to be distinguished from No. 206 问 and No. 291 同

血 281 Hüeh, — Rad. 143.—The sound of hüeh glides into süh in many of these characters, and one is read si.

任 282 Jîn' — An official charge.—With one exception this group is read jin; the primitive is sometimes abbreviated to 壬 in composition, which is seen also in No. 373 呈.

州 283 ʻCheu — A district.—One sound runs through all these, but their meanings show no similarity.

全 284 ʂTsʻüen — Altogether.—The sounds of tsʻüen and shwan run through this group; No. 478 金 is somewhat like it in form.

合 285 Hoh, — To join.—Besides hoh, the sounds koh, hiah, kiah, shih and keh occur; it reappears in Nos. 579 龛 and 837 答; several words bear traces of the meaning of the primitive.

牟 286 ʂMeu — To bellow.—The group is uniform in sound, but the derivatives bear no affinity with the meaning of their phonetic.

如 287 ʂJü — As, if.—Most of these follow their leader, shu and sü being exceptions; it is somewhat like No. 188 奴.

光 288 ‹Kwang — Light.—A group nearly uniform in sound, one only being read kung, but showing little analogy to it in meaning; No. 699 晃 is derived from it.

曳 289 ‹I — To draw.—The sound i prevails, but yeh and sieh are also heard; some of the derivatives interchange it with No. 152 世.

因 290 ‹Yin — Because.—Yin is altered to yen in four instances, but the meanings of the words show no affinity; it is interchanged with No. 536 堙 in some of them.

同 291 ‹T'ung — Same.—A group uniform in sound; many of the derivatives contain an allusion to tubular things; it is like No. 206 冏 and No. 293 回 in its shape.

曲 292 K'üh› — Crooked.—This small group is unlike in sound and sense, one being pronounced kiüng.

回 293 ‹Hwéi — To revolve.—These characters are uniform in sound, and many of them preserve something of the primitive in their meanings.

完 294 ‹Wan — To finish.—Hwan, kwan, wan and yuen are the sounds of these derivatives, in which no similarity of meaning appears.

沙 295 ‹Sha — Sand.—Sha and so divide these characters, and in a few a meaning like a sandy color or roughness can be traced; No. 123 少 is the origin of this primitive.

辛 296 ‹Sin — Rad. 160.—These characters have no similarity in sound or sense, and might be properly referred to the radical; the real group is under No. 933 辡

言 297 ‹Yen — Rad. 149.—These words might have been properly referred to the radical yen, as their meanings partake of it.

亢 298 ‹Liu — An expanse of water.—This resembles No. 217 亢; liu and sho are the sounds, and the derivative 疏 becomes a primitive in 蔬 pulse.

亨 299 ‹Häng — Pervading.—Häng and päng are the sounds, but in none of the compounds is the influence of the primitive to be seen.

良 300 ‹Liang — Conscientious.—Liang, lang and niang are the sounds; it much resembles No. 253 艮, and is sometimes interchanged with No. 624 郎, one of its derivatives.

弟 301 Ti› — Brother.—Uniform in sound with their primitive, several of the characters show traces of its meanings; it is sometimes written like No. 226 夷 making a few synonyms.

辰 302 ‹Shän — Rad. 161.—The sounds are all chün and shun, and the primitive is liable to be mistaken for No. 402. 長.

戒 303 Kiai› — A precept.—Kiai and hiai are the only sounds; and several words exhibit some analogy to the primitive in their meaning.

巫 305 ‹Wu — Incantation.—The characters exhibit traces of the primitive, from which they differ in sound; one (筮) becomes a primitive.

吾 306 ‹Wu — I.—Wu, yü and ya are the sounds; the idea of forcibly stopping is found in half of the derivatives.

尨 307 ‹Mang — A hound.—Uniform in sound, the group is diverse in meaning, and contains no word in common use.

否 308 ‹Feu — Not.—These derivatives are read péi and pi; it is derived from No. 71 不, and resembles that group in meaning.

克 309 Koh› — To overcome.—These are read koh and k'ing; two common derivatives are synonyms.

巠 310 ‹King — A rivulet.—This group is read king, hing and käng; it is often contracted to 圣 in rapid writing.

邪 311 ‹Sié — Illicit.—All are read yé; and the primitive is probably contracted from 耶, with which half of the derivatives are still written, as 椰 a cocoa-nut.

孛 312 Poh› — To turn pale.—These are divided between poh, puh and péi; but there is no similarity of meaning among them.

志 313 Chi› — Will.—All are read like the primitive, but they have no likeness to it in meaning.

耻 314 Cheh› — Pendulous ears.—This resembles No. 417 取, but is not properly interchanged with it; nearly all are read cheh.

弄 315 Lung› — To handle.—These characters all follow their phonetic, but not in its meaning.

孝 316 Hiao› — Filial duty.—All except one (酵 kiao) are sounded hiao, but no connection in their meanings can be traced.

却 317 Kioh› — To refuse.—This is often written 郤 and 劤, but not quite correctly; the characters are read alike, but are seldom used.

走 318 ‹Tseu — Rad. 156.—The derivatives are unlike in sound and sense; and only one of them (徒 tu) is much used.

豆 319 Teu› — Rad. 151.—Teu is the common sound; others are read jü, shu and twan; but no reference to the primitive appears in its derivatives.

車 320 ‹Ché — Rad. 159.—Besides those read ché, two are read 陣 chän and 庫 k'u, which show a reference to the meaning of the primitive; it is tripled in one aberrant form 轟 häng.

更 321 ‹Käng — To change—All but two, 硬 and 鞕 ying are read käng, but no similarity of sense appears in any of them; No. 573 便 is derived from this.

甫 322 ‹Fu — To begin.—In this group, fu and pu are only sounds; No. 648 專 is formed from it.

束 323 Shuh› — To bind.—Three are read sung, the others are shuh, suh and shoh; it is often confounded with No. 249 朿 even in well-printed books.

酉 324 ‹Yiu — Rad. 164.—Four are read yiu; two do not really belong to the group, though they (tsiu 酒 and 遒) cannot well be placed elsewhere in this system.

求 325 ‹K'iu — To ask.—All these are alike in sound, but their senses differ greatly; many are common characters.

折 326 Cheh› — To break.—Out of this group only two (逝 and 誓 shi) vary in sound, but there is no general connection between them in meaning.

甬 327 ‹Yung — To promenade.—Most are read yung, and the others are tung and sung; some of them are interchanged with 勇 or No. 720 庸.

晉 328 Tsin› — This group is nearly uniform in its sound of tsin, one being read sien; no similarity in signification appears.

君 329 ‹Kiun — A prince.—These characters are read kiun and hiun; none of them show any allusion to the phonetic in their meanings.

局 330 Küh› — A storehouse.—All here are read küh, but are rarely used; the primitive itself more than they all.

忌 331 Ki› — To shun.—All here agree with the primitve in sound, and some slightly in meaning; none of them are much in use.

忍 332 ˊJān — Patience.—This sub-group comes from No. 34 刃 and is read nien, no, jǎn or jǎng; the primitive is sometimes badly written like No. 466 忽.

那 333 ˋNo — That.—All are read no and na, like the primitive, but they resemble it only in sound.

孨 334 Lieh, — A pinch.—All agree with its sound lieh, except two read lai; it is like the next.

孚 335 Feu — Trustful.—The last and next are liable to be confounded with this; all under it are read fu or fèu, jü or piao, but their meanings show no agreement.

妥 336 T'o˅ — Stable.—These characters are read sui, no, néi and t'o, and their senses vary much; it is not often confounded with No. 457 委, which it resembles.

坐 337 Tso˅ — To sit.—All these are read like the primitive, and four of them show traces of its meaning.

谷 338 Kuh, — Rad. 150.—This group is read kuh, kih, yuh and suh; one character 欲 reäppears in 慾 with the same sound and the sense intensified.

邦 339 ˊPang — A kingdom.—These follow the primitive only in their sound; it resembles No. 256 扫 a little.

每 340 ˋMéi — Each.—More than half are read like the phonetic, the others are hwéi, hai, and one (敏 min,) reäppears in 憫 min and 繁 fan.

廷 341 ˊTing — A pavilion.—This is occasionally written 廷, but it is often confounded with No. 350 延; the group is uniformly read t'ing, and the idea of elongation runs through their meanings.

告 342 ˋKao — To announce.—Kuh, huh, kao and hao are the sounds in this group; the character 譽 shows the integration of two ancient characters.

秀 343 ˋSiu — Adorned.—This group is read siu, yiu and teu, and a common character is found under each sound; the primitive resembles 禿 bald, which forms 痥 tuh and 頹 tui, and this last again forms 癩; but this small group is not worth separating.

利 344 ˋLi — Advantage.—The characters are uniform in sound, but exhibit no likeness in sense; it is altered to 秒, but not in good usage.

我 345 Ngo˅ — I.—This collection is sounded wo and ngo, but no trace of the primitive appears in the significations.

角 346 Kioh, — Rad. 148.—These characters are all read kioh; one of those put among them 觔 properly belongs to No. 27.

免 347 ˋMien — To refrain.—This group is read mien and wan, with méi and wǎn; it closely resembles 兔 a rabbit, which forms a few derivatives.

峯 348 ˊFung — To meet.—This group is read fung and pung; the primitive is derived from 丰 luxuriant; it is not unlike No. 271 夆 and even No. 401 奉, but cannot be thus written; a large sub-group occurs under No. 774 逢.

位 349 Wéi˅ — A dignity.—The compounds are read li, a small group much in use.

延 350 ˊYen — To delay.—Most are read yen, and others tan, shen and sien; this primitive is so nearly like No. 341 廷 that they are often confounded, and this one is wrongly numbered with eight strokes.

攸 351 ˊYiu — Contented.—More than half of these are read tiao from 條 one of its derivatives; the others are read yiu, siu and siao; the radical is usually placed in the right corner, as in 倏; the form 條 reäppears in 滌 to wash, and seven other characters.

狄 352 Tih, — Nomads.—This group is pronounced like its primitive, but their significations show little resemblance to it.

狂 353 Kw'ang — Insensate.—This is derived from No. 65 王, and its combinations are read kw'ang; the primitive is sometimes improperly altered to No. 223 匡.

毕 354 ˊPi — Joined.—This is a sub-group of No. 108 比, and its sounds are all pi, but their meanings are unlike in all respects.

余 355 ˊYü — I.—The sounds here are yü, tu, sü, chu and shé; the primitive is often written 余 wrongly, and a compound 除 reäppears in a sub-group of three or four.

含 356 ˊHan — To contain.—This group follows its leading sound, and some have tried to find traces of its meaning in them; it resembles No. 182 今 when written badly.

希 357 ˊHi — To hope.—A group read hi, ch'i and hiu, but showing no similarity to the primitive in sense.

兌 358 Tui˅ — To barter.—The sounds of tui and shui, with those of jui, shwoh, toh and yueh, are heard, most of them common characters.

夋 359 Siün˅ — Elated.—This group is sounded tsun, tswan, tsü and so, showing the uncertainty of the phonetic element; the forms of this and the next are to be carefully noted.

矣 360 ˋI — Certainly.—This group is mostly read ngai and ai, with i and si; three of the derivatives are like the primitive, an interjection.

壯 361 Chwang˅ — Robust.—These characters are read like their primitive, which is itself derived from No. 118 爿; none of them indicate any affinity in meaning.

炎 362 Nih, — Flowing water.—This small group is read tsah, or tsan in some dialects; the primitive is sometimes written 㕣, like No 483, and oftener 炎, neither of them accurately.

步 363 Pu˅ — A step.—This group is read pu, except two that are pronounced cheh or sheh.

旱 364 ˋHan — Dry.—Four characters are read kan, the rest are han; they are derived from No. 20 干, and many derivatives in the two groups are synonymous; 旱 is like it in form.

昱 365 Nieh, — To close.—This is also written 臬, but the briefer form is also correct; the compounds are read like it, and the two mean much the same.

見 366 Kien˅ — Rad. 147.—Most of these are read hien, others kien, yen and tien; it is a natural group and easily distinguished from those under the radical.

貝 367 Péi˅ — Rad. 154.—All are read péi or pai; it is not always easy to discriminate between this and No. 490 具, especially in badly-printed books.

粤 368 ˊPing — Quickly.—Ping and ching are the sounds in this small group; three of them relate to marriage contracts.

里 369 ˋLi — Rad. 166.—All are read li, except 埋 mai and 悝 kwei, but none of them derive their meanings from it.

助 370 Chu˅ — To help.—This is derived from No. 193 且, and the group follows its sound; their meanings are different, but one may force a connection in 鋤, and say it is the iron which helps the farmer.

別 371 Pieh, — To divide.—These words are read pieh and pah, and a little ingenuity can discover traces of the meaning of pieh in most of them.

邑 372 Yih, — Rad. 163.—All are read yih or yeh; but the meanings of the derivatives differ entirely from the primitive.

呈 373 ˢChing — To report to.—This group is read ch'ing, except 郢 ying, but the meanings vary according to the radical; 聖 reappears in the sub-group No. 886.

肖 374 Yuen› — To twist.—This is contracted to 肖 in common books; its similarity to No. 703 員 often leads to mistakes; most are read küen, others are yüen and hüen.

呂 375 ʿLu — A vertebra.—This is often written without the connecting line, with six strokes; most of the characters are read lü, two are read kü, and 宮 forms a sub-group of three.

足 376 Tsuh› — Rad. 157.—The few compounds in which this serves as a primitive are mostly read choh, with tsoh or tsuh, but none refer to its meaning very clearly.

困 377 K'wän — Wearied.—All this group follows its leading sound, but none of them its signification; it is easily confounded with No. 499 囷, and care is required to distinguish them.

吳 373 ˢWu — To cry aloud.—All are read wu or yü, but their diversity of meanings shows that the primitive has had no effect upon them.

岑 379 ˢCh'ăn — High.—This group is read tsin, chăn or chin; its meanings bear no affinity to the primitive.

肖 380 Siao› — Like.—About half of these are read siao; others are shao, tsiao and chao; a sub-group is found under No. 658 屑.

EIGHT STROKES.

宗 381 ʿTsung — Ancestors.—These are pronounced tsung and chung; there are several synonyms, and the phonetic is often exchanged with 悤 and with No. 582 癸.

定 382 Ting› — To fix.—Ting, chan and tien are the common sounds, but the diversity in meanings is greater.

宛 383 ʿYuen — To environ.—About half of this group is read yuen, and the others wan; the primitive is now and then contracted to 夗, as 盌 and 盌 a plate.

空 384 ʿK'ung — Empty.—This primitive is derived from No. 27 工, as that sound is heard in three-fourths of the characters, others being read k'iang; many of them, too, are like it in meaning.

宜 385 ˢI — Right.—All of this group are read i, but most of the characters are unlike the phonetic in meaning; it is written like 宜 very often.

官 386 ʿKwan — An officer.—Some of this group vary their sounds from kwan into wan and kien, but show no indication that the primitive has influenced their meanings.

沾 387 ʿChen — To moisten.—This is derived from No. 190 占, and follows it in sound.

妾 388 Tsieh› — A concubine.—Tsieh and sah are the only sounds under this primitive, which has two or three ideographic derivatives.

音 389 ʿPéi — To spit.—This can be mistaken for No. 508 音, but it is never used by itself, the sounds are péi, feu, peu, teu and pu, and their meanings are still more unlike.

卒 390 Tsuh› — A soldier.—The compounds in the juh sheng are sounded tsuh or suh; those in the k'ü sheng are tsui and sui.

庚 391 ʿKăng — Age.—This group is uniformly read kăng, but the primitive is used more than all its compounds.

於 392 ʿYü — In, at.—All in this group are read yü, except two; the primitive is changed to 扵 but this form is rarely seen in the compounds.

府 393 ʿFu — A prefecture.—This is derived from No. 178 付, which has three sub-groups, but they are seldom interchanged with this; their pronunciation is like the primitive.

夜 394 Yé› — Night.—Half the compounds are read yih; the rest yé, one of which 咬 denotes the night voice of a bird.

育 395 Yuh› — To nourish.—These are read like the primitive, and one of the compounds is a synonym of it.

享 396 ʿHiang — To enjoy.—This is to be distinguished from No. 299 亨; it makes two sub-groups, Nos. 727 郭 and 728 孰; chun, tun and shun are the only sounds in it.

京 397 ʿKing — A metropolis.—Most of the compounds are read liang, then king, lioh and kiang; No. 863 景 and No. 803 就 form two sub-groups.

栞 398 ʿShan — Only two of this group are in common use, one of which is read tan; the primitive is not used.

羌 399 ʿKiang — Strong.—These characters are all read kiang; the primitive is written 羌 and 羌 in most cases.

炎 400 ˢYen — A flame.—Most of the derivatives are read tan, others are yen, shan, piao and luh, and a few of them refer to it in their meanings.

奉 401 Fung› — To offer.—Fung, pung and pang are the sounds in this group; the primitive is often wrongly written like No. 348 夆, in consequence of the similarity of sound.

長 402 ˢCh'ang — Rad. 168.—These characters are all read chang; the derivatives are more used than those under the radical; it is sometimes miswritten like No. 302 辰

忝 403 ʿT'ien — To defame.—This is also written 忝, and there seems to be no difference between the two; they both look like 恭 kung, which has no derivatives; the sounds are uniformly t'ien.

武 404 ʿWu — Military.—This group is mostly read wu, the derivative 弜 pin being the chief exception.

妻 405 ʿTs'i — A wife.—All are read ts'i, but in none of them can any trace of the primitive be seen.

隶 406 Nieh› — A treddle.—This is often written 隶, apparently to show the radical plainly; the sounds of tsieh, tieh, sheh and sha are heard.

肩 407 ʿKien — The shoulder.—This group reads like its phonetic, but none of the characters are much used.

奇 408 ʿKi — Surprising.—The sounds i and ki are the only ones in this most numerous group under one primitive; three or four of its compounds as 旖 waving, 猗 flourishing and 寄 to send, form sub-groups.

來 409 ˢLai — To come on.—This group follows the phonetic; the primitive is sometimes written 耒 when it resembles No. 257 耒.

匡 410 ʿYai — A cliff.—These characters are read yai and ngai, but only one of them has any reference to its meaning.

直 411 Chih› — Straight.—The sounds chih and sheh are the chief ones; No. 674 眞 is derived from it, and care is necessary to distinguish the two.

奄 413 ʿYen — Suddenly.—The sounds in this collection range between yen and ngan, yeh and ngoh.

奈 414 Nai — How.—The sounds here are nah and noh, as well as nai, but only one word is in common use.

到 415 Tao — To reach.—This sub-group is derived from No. 237 至, and is uniformly read tao.

幸 416 Hing — Happily.—This primitive differs from No. 296 幸 and is sometimes written 夲 in pedantic or ancient style; the derivatives are mostly read hing, and half of them mean to note; it reappears in No. 927 羣.

取 417 Tsu — To take.—This resembles No. 314 耳; about one-half of the characters change into tseu and cheu; No. 864 叟 forms a sub-group.

表 418 Piao — To show out.—From the similarity in sound, this is sometimes interchanged with No. 752 票; the derivatives are read piao.

毒 419 Tuh — Poisonous.—This group is read tuh, except 瑇 tai, but has no unity of meaning; the incorrect form 毐 is occasionally seen.

青 420 Tsing — Rad. 174.—Some confusion exists in these derivatives, many of which properly come under the radical; all are read tsing, except 猜 chai, and many of them relate to color.

卦 421 Kwa — Augury.—A sub-group from No. 239 圭; its characters mostly refer to suspension, and are read kwa and hwa.

圶 422 Luh — A road.—These are mostly read lüh, with müh and kwéi; their meanings seldom have reference to the primitive.

麥 423 Ling — An eminence.—This resembles the preceding, but is never interchanged with it; the characters are read ling or lăng.

亞 424 Ya — Second to.—The prevailing sounds are ngoh and ya; this primitive forms sub-groups under 壺 and 壺 and No. 819 惡.

東 425 Tung — East.—This resembles No. 532 束 in poorly-printed books; the compounds are read tung except 陳 chăn, but their meanings have no likeness.

事 426 Shi — Affair.—Uniform in sound with the primitive, but showing no affinity to its meaning.

亟 427 Kih — Extreme.—The compounds of this phonetic follow its sound, and it is almost a synonym of 極, its most common character.

画 428 Hwah — To limn.—This is regarded as a contraction of 畫, and the full form is also found in well-printed books; the characters are mostly read hwoh.

臤 429 Kien — Robust.—This resembles 取, and its full form 堅 seems to have been often intended in the compounds; No. 946 監 and No. 995 覽 form two sub-groups; kien, hien, shu, kin, shăn and kăng are the sounds under it.

或 430 Hwoh — Perhaps.—This group is read kwoh, hwoh or yuh; there are sub-groups under No. 794 國 and 彧 elegant.

兩 431 Liang — Two.—The sounds in this group are all liang, and a tinge of its meaning is seen in several of them.

林 432 Lin — A forest.—The sounds lan, lin, shăn and pin occur under this primitive; it is not the same as 林, with which it is occasionally confounded.

析 433 Sih — To cleave.—This is derived from No. 99 斤, and the group is uniformly sounded sih, but the compounds show nothing of its meaning.

松 434 Sung — A pine.—This is derived from No. 116 公, of which it is a sub-group; all are read sung, but have no likeness of meaning.

其 435 K'i — This.—A large and homophonous group; three small sub-groups flow from it, as 基 a foundation, No. 284 斯 that, and 萁 bluish.

昔 436 Sih — Anciently.—The sounds sih, tsih, tsoh and tsioh, in the juh shing, and cha, tso and tsié in the shang shing occur; one derivative No. 930 藉 heads a small sub-group.

戔 437 Tsan — Light.—The sounds of tsien, chan and tsan are common in this group; some sub-groups are formed from it.

帚 438 Cheu — To sweep.—Sao and fu are the sounds; one derivative 掃 is another form of the primitive, which is not in use.

門 439 Măn — Rad. 169.—Two are read wăn, and the others măn; some of them properly belong to 門 as a radical.

隶 440 Tai — Rad. 171.—This group mostly belongs to 隶 as a radical, and it is impossible to decide under which class to look for a character.

居 441 K'ü — To dwell.—Regular in its form and sound, and three or four of the group show some analogy to the primitive in their signification.

屈 442 Küh — To bend.—The sounds are küh, kuh, küeh and huh; the primitive comes from No. 207 出, with which it is occasionally interchanged.

叕 443 Choh — To connect.—The sound of these characters is mostly choh, then chui, toh and ü; an idea of continuity is often seen in their meanings.

函 444 Han — A letter.—The sounds here are uniformly han, but the significations are unlike.

孟 445 Măng — First.—A small collection, read măng; the derivatives are of trifling importance.

阿 446 Ngo — A particle.—The compounds are ngo or o; it is one of several sub-groups derived from No. 145 可.

受 447 Sheu — To receive.—All but one 鬩 wăn of this collection are read sheu, and that is rarely used.

孟 448 Yin — To approach.—This group is read yin; there are few common characters except 婬 and 淫, the last of which reappears in 霪 a soaking rain.

采 449 Ts'ai — Ornamental.—One of this group is read kwéi, an exception to the usual sound of ts'ăi; four or five are common characters.

爭 450 Chăng — To dissent.—This group is read chăng and tsing; some of the words affect the meaning as well as the sound of the primitive; it is interchanged with No. 420 青.

非 451 Fei — Rad. 175.—Most of this group read féi, the others are read pai and péi; the distinction between it as a phonetic and a radical is dubious.

幷 452 Ping — United.—The sounds of ping, pung and p'ien occur in this group; the primitive is often contracted to 并, and may be sought for under six strokes.

卷 453 Küen — A roll.—These are all read küen, and a trace of its meaning is perceptible in many of the derivatives; where the radical is placed underneath, 卷 is sometimes contracted to No. 219 夬, which thus becomes a synonym.

知 454 Chè — To know.—Uniformly read chi, this group has no similarity in meaning.

制 455 Chi — A law.—This collection of characters is read chi, but their meanings are very diverse.

垂 456 ˊChui — Pendent.—The sounds chui, to, shui and yue occur in the group, in which no affinity of meaning is seen.

委 457 ˊWéi — To depute.—The sound wéi varies into wo, jui, jwa, néi and ngai; this primitive is like No. 336 妥, and the two are often written wrongly.

剁 458 Küh, — A pinch.—The sounds of this group follow the primitive, and in many of the characters some glimpses of its meaning are seen.

肥 459 ˊFéi — Fat.—All are read féi, and one or two show some analogy to the primitive, as 癉 ill from obesity; it is interchanged with 巴 in one instance.

朋 460 ˊPäng — A friend.—This group is read päng, with one or two read ping; a sub-group of nine characters is formed from 崩, many of them synonymous forms of it.

服 461 Fuh, — To subdue.—All are sounded fuh or puh; this group is properly derived from 艮 to govern, under which are found 報 to recompense, 赧 to blush, and others.

罹 462 Li² — Crime.—These are sounded li and léi; their meanings differ widely from the primitive.

攸 463 ˊKi — To open.—One character 肇 chao is peculiar in its sound, and the primitive always covers the radical.

周 464 ˊCheu — Around.—So many in this group are read tiao, that the more usual sound cheu is made doubtful; their meanings have no affinity.

匋 465 ˊT'ao — A kiln.—This group is all read t'ao; the primitive is derived from No. 258 缶, and the two have many synonyms.

忽 466 Hwuh, — Suddenly.—Nearly alike in sound, as hwuh or uh, these characters also present many analogies in their meanings; the primitive proceeds from No. 96 勿, and is not the same as No. 563 忽.

臽 467 Hien² — A pit.—This character proceeds from 臼 a mortar, and its compounds are read hien, yen, han, kan, tan, chan and kiah; ideas alluding to cavities occur in several.

欣 468 ˊHin — Joyful.—Many of this group are synonyms with those under No. 99 斤, and resemble their primitive in sound and sense.

咎 469 Kiu² — A fault.—These differ wholly in sound and sense, and no analogy can be traced; the primitive 昔 tsan resembles it; 偕 喈 and 揩 are all its derivatives.

兒 470 ˊ'rh — A child.—This is often erroneously written 皃 mao; the group is read 'rh, é or ni, a few varying, and many show a trace of the primitive.

臾 471 ˊYü — An instant.—This is often contracted to 臾, and like No. 467 臽 and No. 953 舁, is derived from 臼 a mortar; its compounds are all read yü.

隹 472 ˊChui — Rad. 172.—As a primitive, this is confounded with kia 佳, and must be regarded as the same; a sub-group is formed from 雀 a sparrow, which then resembles No. 626 雚; the sounds shui, sui, tui, hwéi, wéi and chun occur under it.

帛 473 Poh, — Taffety.—This group is read poh, mien and kin, and one of them 綿 has two derivatives.

阜 474 ˊFeu — Rad. 170.—The derivatives are all read feu except 埠 pu, but their meanings are unlike; in some characters it is contracted to No. 208 自, when the radical is under.

卑 475 ˊPi — Despicable.—This group is mostly read pi, then péi and pai; it is often incorrectly written like No. 498 畀.

昏 476 ˊHwun — Obscure.—This character is altered to 昏 in those which are read min, apparently to indicate their difference from those read hwun, which more resemble the primitive.

念 477 Nien² — To think on.—The sounds nien, nieh, yen, jän, tien and shän occur in this group, but none of the characters assimilate to the meaning of the primitive.

金 478 ˊKin — Rad. 167.—As a phonetic, this gives the sound of kin to nine, the others being read yin and chao; 欽 forms a sub-group of three.

肴 479 ˊHiao — Food.—This group is uniformly read hiao, but no likeness is traceable in its meanings; it is made of No. 115 爻 placed above 肉 flesh.

侖 480 ˊLun — To join.—Lun, the usual sound, rarely runs into lüen; the meanings do not correspond.

舍 481 Shié² — A cottage.—This is derived from No. 262 舌, with which it has some synonyms; in 舖 and 館 it is altered from the radicals 金 and 食.

叒 482 Luh, — To carve.—The compounds are read luh and poh; No. 584 叒 is much like this in appearance.

畱 483 ˊTsz — Wild land.—These are often read chi; the primitive is also written 畱, but is not interchanged with No. 362 劉.

肯 485 ˊK'äng — Willing.—This group is read kang and shih; the primitive is a little like No. 479 肴.

卓 486 Choh, — To excel.—The sound choh varies into chao in nearly half, others being read tao and tiao; it must not be written 卑, as that is used only as part of No. 826 朝.

虎 487 ˊHu — A tiger.—This is regarded as another form of Rad. 141 虍, and all the compounds are so read; No. 672 虡 and 處, each make a small sub-group.

罔 488 ˊWang — None of.—This group is sounded wang; the primitive is sometimes contracted to 网, which more easily distinguishes it from the next.

岡 489 ˊKang — A peak.—These compounds are all read kang, but have no resemblance in meaning; 岡 is altered to 罡 in some of them; this and the last are easily confounded.

具 490 Kü² — To prepare.—This group is read kü; the phonetic is often written like No. 367 貝, with which it has nothing in common.

㝵 491 Ngai² — An obstacle.—The half of these are read ngai and the rest teh; the primitive has some relation to No. 240 寺 in some of the synonyms.

果 492 ˊKwo — Fruit.—About two-thirds of this group agree in the sound kwo, but the others, read hwo, lo, wo, hwa and kwan, are so much in use, that the primitive is no guide to the sound.

明 493 ˊMing — Bright.—One of this small group is read mäng, the others ming; there is no resemblance in the meanings.

易 494 Yih, — To alter.—Most of these derivatives are read tih, others i, yih, sih, tsz' and sing; the primitive is similar to No. 592 昜 light.

昆 495 ˊKwun — Like.—Ilwun takes the place of kwun in about one-third of this group; in badly-printed books the primitive resembles No. 665 毘 clear.

昌 496 Ch'ang — Distinguished.—All are read ch'ang in this group, and the primitive is shadowed forth in the meanings of many; its form resembles No. 597 昌.

固 497 Kú — Stable.—This flows from No. 153 古, and the group is nearly uniformly sounded, ku, ko and hoh being variants.

畀 498 Pí — To give.—This primitive differs from No. 475 鼻, though confounded with it; the group is regularly sounded pi.

囷 499 K'iun — A granary.—This and No. 377 困 are easily confounded, and the similarity of their sounds kiun and k'wän is a reason for particular care.

典 500 T'ien — A law.—This group follows the phonetic tien; one variant is read t'un; in some cases, No. 953 與 is badly written like this.

尙 501 Shang — Still.—This group is read shang, chang and tang; similarity of sound may lead beginners to confound this and No. 715 商; several sub-groups flow from it, as No. 870 敞, No. 1032 黨 No. 786 堂, No. 914 當, No. 858 掌 and others.

沓 502 Tah — Heavy.—This group is read tah; in a few of the compounds it is interchanged with No. 698 昜 from identity of sound.

NINE STROKES.

宣 503 Siün — To publish.—This flows from No. 245 亘, but it has little in common except sound; most of the words are read hüen; No. 555 爰 is interchanged with it.

客 504 Koh — A guest.—This offshoot of No. 272 各 differs from it in sound, kiah being most common.

突 505 Tuh — Suddenly.—One sound, tuh guides this group, but no ingenuity can detect any uniformity in the significations.

恒 506 Hăng — Constant.—This group somewhat resembles No. 503, but it is a sub-group from No. 228 亙, and all the characters are read kăng; none are much used.

帝 507 Tí — A sovereign.—In combination this is occasionally interchanged with No. 755 帶 and altered to 朿, but the group is nearly uniform in sound and form; shi 實 is an anomaly.

音 508 Yin — Rad. 180.—The use of this character as a phonetic or a radical is often perplexing; most are read ngan, the rest yin, yen and k'in; some of them are good examples of ideographic writing, as 瘖 sick in sound for drunk.

羚 509 Yiu — A pennon.—This is also correctly written 斿; the sounds are all yin, but the meanings are unlike; it resembles the next in its form.

施 510 Shi — To concede.—This appears to be derived from No. 35 也 and is often contracted to 𠂢 in common books; the compounds are read i and shi.

度 511 Tú — A measure.—The sounds here are tu, toh and tuh; it resembles, but is not likely to be confounded with sih 席 a mat, as that forms no compounds.

彥 512 Yen — Wise.—A group nearly all read yen and ngan; the correct form is contracted to 彦 in well-printed books.

亭 513 T'ing — An arbor.—This sub-group arises from No. 4 丁, and is sounded t'ing; the primitive varies into 亭 at all times.

復 514 Fuh — To revert to.—The primitive has been superseded by one of its compounds, No. 819 復, which leads a sub-group; the sounds are fuh and pih, and many characters show traces of the primitive in their meaning.

軍 515 Kiün — An army.—The sounds in this group are kiün, hiün, yun, hwun, kwŏn and hwéi. but in only a few cases is there any hint of the meaning of the primitive.

首 516 Sheu — Rad. 185.—Of this group, only two of the four come under it, which are read tao.

前 517 Tsien — Before.—A homophonous collection read tsien, but only one or two of them show traces of the primitive in their signification.

咨 518 Tsz' — To report to.—This might properly have remained a sub-group of No. 221 次, with which it agrees in sound.

奏 519 Tseu — To memorialize.—These characters vary from tseu to chеu in a few cases; the primitive is easily confounded with No. 633 秦 unless care is taken.

春 520 Ch'un — The spring.—This group is read ch'un nearly throughout; No. 732 春 is sometimes confounded with it, by being contracted to this form.

匧 521 Kieh — A coffer.—This flows from No. 304 夾, of which it is a derivative; the groups resemble each other in sense and sound.

肴 522 To — To fall.—The compounds are read to; the primitive is otherwise written 隋 without altering its sense; the sub-group No. 833 flows from 造, but the others are unused.

威 523 Wéi — Majestic.—This is sounded wéi, but the characters are unusual, nor liable to be confounded with those under No. 233 成 if care be used.

咸 524 Hien — All.—The sound hien varies into kien, chen, han and kan, and one derivative 感 originates the few under No. 884.

頁 525 Hieh — Rad. 181.—Many of the derivatives of this primitive when used as a radical, show the difficulty of deciding where to put them; 須 reäppears in No. 847; the sounds are sü and fan.

面 526 Mien — Rad. 176.—The similarity of sound has ruled this group, which in many cases decides whether to put it here or under the radical; the meanings are incongruous.

耎 527 Jwan — Tender.—The sounds in this group are jwan, no and nwan; the meanings in several cases exhibit traces of the primitive.

奔 528 Pän — To hasten.—One character is read fän, and the others pän; the form of this primitive suggests some affinity to No. 149 本.

叅 529 Cha — Great.—This flows from No. 265 多; the sounds are mostly cha and a few na; they bear no resemblance in meaning.

封 530 Fung — To seal.—The derivatives which have this primitive on the side are read fung, those with it on the top are mostly read pang.

者 531 Ché — This.—Most of these characters are read chu, and others are read tu, ché and sü; three small sub-groups occur under 著 chu, 署 shu and 諸 chu, and a fourth under No. 812 奢 still larger.

束 532 Kien — To select.—This primitive is often carelessly written like No. 425 束; one compound reäppears in No. 1000 闌; most of the characters are read lien, and a few kien.

匽 533 ‹Yen To conceal.—This is really a sub-group of 晏 yen, but that has only one or two compounds; nearly all are read yen; yah and an being the exceptions.

畐 534 ‹Fu Happy.—Most of this group are sounded fu or fuh, the rest are pih; 富 forms a sub-group of four characters.

剌 535 Lah› Cruel.—This group is read lah; the primitive resembles a compound of No. 249 剌, but the two are easily distinguished.

堙 536 ‹Yin To wall up.—The prevailing sound yin alters to yen and kien in a few cases; the phonetic often interchanges with No. 290 因

要 537 ‹Yao To desire.—This resembles the character 耍 shwa, but that forms no compounds; the sounds are uniformly yao.

相 538 ‹Siang Mutual.—A nearly homophonous group read siang and shwang; and the meanings are totally dissimilar; under No. 1007 霜 is a small sub-group.

查 539 ‹Ch'a To examine.—This primitive resembles No. 785 虘 in sound, and both may be derived from No. 192 且; its sounds are all cha.

甚 540 Shin› Excessive.—Shăn, chăn, tan, kan, sâ. and chan, are the sounds in this group: their meanings are even more diverse.

某 541 ‹Meu Certain.—Most of this group are read méi; only two follow the primitive in sound, and none in meaning.

葉 542 Yeh› A leaf.—The numerous sounds here are read yeh, sieh, tieh, cheh and sheh, and in several its meaning can be traced.

南 543 ‹Nan South.—A uniform group in sound, but unlike in meanings.

胡 544 ‹Hu How.—Apparently derived from No. 153 古, but its etymology shows a different source; its sounds are all hu, but its meanings diverse.

柔 545 ‹Teu Soft.—These are read jau and nao; a large number exhibit traces of the meaning of the primitive.

敉 546 Meu› Strong.—The radical is usually placed under the primitive, as in 務 wu; this group is read meu, mu and muh.

建 547 Kien› To build.—The derivatives are all read kien, but almost none of them exhibit its meaning.

屋 548 Wuh› A dwelling.—The characters in this group are read wuh or uh, but none of the meanings of the primitive enter into them.

叚 549 Kia› Illusory.—This resembles No. 572 段, and some care is necessary to distinguish the two; the sounds are kia and hia.

韋 550 ‹Wéi Rad. 178.—It is sometimes doubtful in this group which should belong to the primitive and which to the radical; wéi is altered to hwéi and i in a few cases.

賁 551 Fu› To carry.—These derivatives are sounded fu, but their meanings are incongruous; it is allied to No. 367 貝.

奐 552 Hwan› Beautiful.—Hwan is the usual sound in this group, except one or two read twan; the meanings are sometimes like the phonetic.

胥 553 ‹Sü All.—These are all read sü or si; their meanings have no relation to that of the primitive.

眉 554 ‹Méi Eyebrows.—A group read méi throughout; the old form of the phonetic 眉 is often used.

爰 555 Yuen› Up to.—About half are read yuen, the rest are nwan, hwan and hüen; the primitive is interchanged with No. 928 爰 and No. 527 奚 in a few cases.

再 556 Ching› To elevate.—The sounds are ching or chăng; but their meanings are incongruous; it is often written 冉 under eight strokes.

癸 557 ‹Kwéi To return.—These compounds are read kwéi, except küeh; the group is very diverse in its meanings.

重 558 ‹Chung Heavy.—About six are read t'ung or hüeh, the others are all chung; two (動 and 董) reappear in sub-groups of three each.

舌 559 Chah› To lull.—A uniform group under chah, except a few read shah or liah; the compounds show no affinity in meaning.

秋 560 ‹Ts'iu Autumn.—The usual sound of ts'iú varies into tsiao and chev in half a dozen instances; some find traces of the phonetic in several characters.

香 561 ‹Hiang Rad. 186.—These compounds are alike in sound, but have not much similarity in meaning.

訇 562 ‹Hung A crash.—This group is mostly read hung, one being sounded küh, in which it is evidently interchanged with No. 458 匈, as some of the others are with 旬.

忽 563 ‹Ts'ung Hastily.—This is written 悤 and 悤, or contracted to 匆, but has no connection with No. 466 忽; the sound ts'ung varies into chw'ăng in two cases.

盈 564 ‹Ying Full.—One of this small group occasionally varies into chăng, but it is read ying in all common words.

盾 565 ‹Tun A shield.—Tun, shun, siün and chwen are found in this group; the meanings are very unlike.

扁 566 ‹Pien A slip.—Nearly all of this group are read pien, which alters into pin and pan in two or three cases; traces of the primitive are seen in several words.

契 567 K'i› A deed.—This is derived from No. 256 劫, of which No. 809 絜 forms another sub-group; its sounds are unlike, varying into hi, kieh, hieh and sieh.

衍 568 ‹Yen To inundate.—Out of this group of yen, one character is pronounced k'ien; the primitive itself is ideographic.

律 569 Lüh› A law.—A derivative from No. 252 聿; the meanings in the group are unlike, though their sounds are all läh.

皆 570 ‹Kiai All.—All of this number are read kiai or hiai; some of them indicate an influence of the primitive in their meanings.

風 571 ‹Fung Rad. 182.—Most of this group are read fung, then fan or lan; the significations are sometimes ideographic, as 颿 a soughing.

段 572 Twan› A fragment.—This is very similar to No. 549 叚, but their dissimilarity in sound helps to distinguish them, as each group follows its leader.

便 573 Pien› Convenient.—A sub-group derived from No. 321 更, uniformly sounded pien, but incongruous in meaning.

卽 575 Tsih› Also.—These are all sounded tsih; the primitive is written like No. 624 郎 in poorly-printed books, and No. 974 節 flows from it.

侯 576 ‹Heu A prince.—This and 矦 are evidently the same primitive, but this form is mostly used in the compounds, which are sounded heu or keu.

禹 577 ‹Yü An old Emperor.—This and No. 598 禺 are similar in form, and many derivatives under both are sounded alike; half of these are read kü.

保 578 ‹Pao To protect.—A homophonous group read pao, into whose meanings the primitive does not enter to any perceptible degree.

奄 579 ‹Yen› To conceal.—The sounds of yen and ngan occur in these characters; this is a sub-group from No. 285 合, but the two have no analogy.

俞 580 ‹Yü› To assent.—The sounds are yü, shu and teu, mostly the former; this and No. 517 前 may hastily be confused.

酋 581 ‹Ts'eu› A leader.—Half are read ts'eu, the others yiu and siu; it proceeds from No. 324 酉, but the analogy between them is undiscoverable.

叢 582 ‹Tsung› Gay.—This group is entirely homophonous; in many of the compounds it is interchanged with 從 and 宗.

飛 583 ‹Fei› Rad. 183.—This group is quite unnecessary, as the characters under the radical contain all but one.

彖 584 ‹Tw'an› To explain.—This is similar both to No. 482 衆 and No. 412 豕; most of the derivatives are read chwen, then twan, yuen and hwei.

囟 585 ‹Nao› Brains.—This group is all read nao; its meanings occasionally allude to the primitive.

貞 586 ‹Ching› Virginity.—All the compounds are read ching, but their meanings bear no likeness to the primitive.

若 587 Joh› If.—This group is read joh, jé, noh and ch'oh; it is derived from No. 139 右, but their meanings are diverse.

英 588 ‹Ying› Flowery.—This group is read ying, and its phonetic is derived from No. 200 央, but the compounds seldom take after it in signification.

苗 589 ‹Miao› Sprouts.—A few in this collection change miao into mao and nao, but none indicate any affinity with the primitive.

昱 590 Yuh› Light.—This group is read yuh, and one derivative has supplanted the primitive.

則 591 Tseh› Law.—Most of these words are read tseh or tsi; and none indicate that the primitive has perceptibly influenced their meanings.

昜 592 ‹Yang› The sky.—This resembles No. 494 易, and in many cases is confused with it; Nos. 767 昜 and No. 798 湯 form sub-groups; the sounds are yang, t'ang, tang, chang and shang.

是 593 ‹Shi› To be.—The sounds shi and ti about equally divide this group, one of the easiest to recognize.

眇 594 ‹Miao› Mysterious.—Uniform in its sound miao, this is derived from No. 123 少, with which its meanings have the most affinity.

星 595 ‹Sing› A star.—This group is read sing and tăng; the primitive is derived from No. 164, 生, and one or two derivatives are like it.

曷 596 Hoh› Who?—A large group sounded hoh, ngoh, koh, hieh, yeh, kieh, liah and ai; 歇 is often used for its primitive, and 謁 leads a small sub-group.

冒 597 Mao› Illicit.—The sound of mao changes into méi, fung and suh in some characters; this primitive is often contracted to 冒 in combination.

禺 598 ‹Yü› Alone.—Yü, yung, ngeu and yeu are the sounds; it somewhat resembles No. 577 禹, and reappears in No. 921 萬.

叟 599 Tsih› To flatter.—Uniformly sounded tsih; the derivative 蕺 has three under it, but they are not common.

思 600 Sz'› To think.—This is like 恩 favor, whose four compounds are rarely met; this group is sounded sz', si, sai and tsai.

畏 601 Wéi› To fear.—A group read wéi, and similar in form and sound to the next, but presenting no likeness in sense.

胃 602 Wèi› Stomach.—This primitive resembles 冑 a helmet, but that forms no compounds; these are read wéi and kwéi.

罗 603 Ngoh› To frighten.—This phonetic is like No. 994 𠙵, with which it is often interchanged; the words in this group are all pronounced ngoh.

廻 604 ‹Hwéi› To curve.—This flows from No. 293 回, with which it is often interchanged, and agrees entirely in its sounds.

咼 605 ‹Kwa› A wry mouth.—These derivatives are sounded kwa, ko, kwo, ho and wo; the primitive is not in use, and one compound 過 reäppears in No. 924.

耑 606 ‹Twan› Beginning.—The sounds twan, chwen, jui, chui and shwan, occur in this group, whose primitive is a contracted form of 尊 singly.

TEN STROKES.

宰 607 Tsai› To rule.—This, a sub-group of No. 296 辛, is read tsai, tsz' and hai; the primitive exerts no influence on the sense.

寒 608 Hia› To fill a crack.—The primitive is regarded as an old form of 塞, and covers the radical; the sub-groups are No. 1004 𡩠, with 寧 and 賽; the sounds are kien, lien, seh, chai and sai.

家 609 ‹Kia› A household.—These derivatives are all read kia; it is not a sub-group of No. 412 豕, nor should it be confounded with No. 623 冢.

害 610 Hai› To injure.—The sounds are hai, hiah, koh and hoh; several of the characters are not unlike it in signification.

窄 611 Cha› Narrow.—This is derived from No. 166 乍, with which it is sometimes interchanged; the sounds are all cha.

宓 612 ‹Wa› A hollow.—A sub-group from No. 172 瓜; the derivatives are uniformly read wa.

容 613 ‹Yung› Patient.—A group having little in common in the meanings of its characters, which are uniformly read yung.

烇 614 ‹Ying› This has now become an imperfect character, often contracted to 艹 in common books; No. 806 勞 forms a sub-group; the sounds are ying, yung, king, lao, loh, liao and kiung.

旁 615 ‹Pang› The side.—An offshoot from No. 54 方; the derivatives are like the primitive in sound, but show little likeness in their meaning; a small sub-group occurs under 𣪊.

疾 616 Tsih› Urgent.—These compounds are read tsih, but their meanings are very incongruous.

唐 617 ‹T'ang› Great.—These derivatives are read t'ang, and most of them are in common use; it is not likely to be confounded with No. 720 庸.

袞 618 ‹Kwăn› Royal robes.—Alike in their sound kwan, these compounds show no affinity with their phonetic.

玆 619 ‹Tsz'› This.—A group read tsz or tsi, and having two small sub-groups; the primitive is properly written 玆, but contracted to 茲 and 𢆶.

畜 620 Chuh› To rear.—All the compounds are read chuh, and a remarkable similarity is to be seen in their meanings.

衰 621 ‹Shwai› Ruined.—This primitive resembles No. 647 袁 and still more 哀, to compassionate; the derivatives are sounded so, tsui and shwai, and are in common use.

高 622 ‹Kao Rad. 189.—In composition this is often contracted a little, as seen in No. 935 豪 and 毫; the sounds are kao, hao, kiao, hiao, hoh and sung.

冢 623 ›Mung Obscure.—This primitive is more frequently written 蒙, to distinguish it more easily from No. 625 冢 and No. 609 家; its compounds are all read mung.

郎 624 ‹Lang A man.—An offshoot from No. 300 艮, and easily confounded with No. 575 卽 in badly-printed books; the sounds are uniformly lang.

冢 625 ‹Chung Great.—The compounds all read chung, are few and not much used, so that they are less likely to be mistaken for those under No. 623 冢.

雚 626 Hoh› Eminent.—A variety of this primitive, written 雚 with eleven strokes, is considered to be more correct; this and No. 796 雀 are unlike; hoh and kioh are the common sounds in this group.

冥 627 ›Ming Obscure.—Ming is changed to mih and mien in a few cases; this group has many characters exhibiting a trace of their primitive.

羔 628 ‹Kao A lamb.—Kao and yao are the only sounds; the primitive is derived from No. 218 羊 but its compounds show no affinity with either.

差 629 ‹Cha To differ.—The complicated form 羞 is sometimes met with in the compounds; their sounds are cha, so, tsié and tso, the last showing the influence of No. 136 左.

朔 630 Soh› New moon.—This primitive shows some affinity with 欶 to hiccup, the source of No. 810 厥, but only in appearance; the sounds are soh and su.

迷 631 ›Mi To bewitch.—This is a sub-group of No. 220 米, and the compounds exhibit traces of the primitive in their meanings.

脊 632 Tsih› Backbone.—This group is read tsih, and one or two of the derivatives show some analogy to the phonetic.

秦 633 ›Ts'in A kingdom.—This group is sounded tsin and chin or chăn; the primitive resembles 泰 t'ai, which makes no compounds, and there is less likelihood therefore of confounding the two.

素 634 Su› Simple.—A group read su, whose phonetic is very similar to No. 641 索, both of them relating to silk.

黃 635 Keu› To link.—A group whose original sound keu varies into kiang in four characters;—an unusual change.

辱 636 Juh› Disgrace.—Most of the derivatives are read juh, others nuh and neu; they often show a trace of the primitive.

原 637 ›Yuen Origin.—These are generally read yuen; one is tsüen, and the characters show little reference to the primitive.

夏 638 Hia› Summer.—Hia and sha are the sounds; the primitive looks a little like No. 971 憂 contracted, but they are totally distinct.

致 639 Chi› To effect.—These characters form a sub-group under No. 237 至, and many are like those in meaning; they all follow the leading sound chi.

晉 640 Tsin› To increase.—This is contracted to 晋, which is similar to the aberrant character 普 everywhere; its usual sound tsin becomes tsien in some cases.

索 641 Soh, A cord.—Nearly all are read soh, others are sheh or sih; the primitive resembles No. 634 素 in form and meaning.

馬 642 ‹Ma Rad. 187.—This group is mostly read ma, the others are chăn; the derivatives have no likeness in meaning to their phonetic.

耆 644 ‹K'i A sexagenarian.—This primitive flows from No. 244 老, but the meanings in this group are unlike either; most of them are read shi, not k'i.

盍 645 Hoh, How?—This primitive is also written 盖 and 蓋, but in the compounds the correct form is generally followed; their sounds are hoh, koh, ngoh, yeh, kai and ngai.

貢 646 Kung› Tribute.—The sound kung in this group shows an affinity with No. 27 工, and the whole character reäppears in No. 1039 贛; kung runs into lung and hung.

袁 647 ‹Yuen A robe.—This resembles No. 618 衰, and is contracted to 袁 in writing and common books; No. 928 裹 flows from it; the sounds are yuen.

尃 648 ‹Fu To publish.—This and No. 748 專 are very easily confounded; 溥 forms a sub-group; the sounds are fu, foh, pu and poh, the last being most common.

鬲 649 Kih, Rad. 193.—This primitive has two sounds; the compounds read kih, koh and hoh, show considerable uniformity of meaning with its less usual signification of division.

哥 650 ‹Ko Elder brother.—A derivative from No. 145 可; the characters are all read ko.

栗 651 Lih, A chestnut.—This phonetic rules the group under it; the character 粟 is very similar, and has seven derivatives; the two are easily mistaken unless care is taken.

莆 652 Pi› To prepare.—This primitive is often written 葡, and incorrectly 備, both of which lead one astray when searching for it; pi, pai and péi are the sounds.

倝 653 Kan› Surmise.—The radical is placed on the right in these characters as in 翰; one sub-group occurs under No. 895 幹; the sounds are kan, han and wah.

退 654 Tui› To recede.—This is interchanged with No. 682 追 in a few characters; one alone is read tun.

弱 655 Joh, Weak.—This group has the sounds nioh, joh, nao, nih and niao; the primitive has little influence on the meanings.

犀 656 ‹Si Late.—This is also written like 犀 a rhinoceros, under eleven strokes, and both forms are correct; the sounds vary from si to ts'z' and chi.

展 657 ‹Chen To expand.—These characters follow the sound of their primitive with two or three exceptions, some being read both chen and nien.

屑 658 Sieh, Fragments.—This appears like a sub-group under No. 380 肖, with which it shows no connection in sense or sound; all its characters are read sieh.

脅 659 Hieh, Ribs.—Similar in sound, these characters are unlike in form, a few being written 胁, which are regarded as synonyms.

烝 660 ‹Ching To steam.—This flows from No. 255 丞 and has influenced many of its compounds, all of which are read ching.

孫 661 ‹Sun Grandson.—This primitive resembles 係 to join, and each of them form sub-groups; these are all read sun, but have no similarity of meaning.

舀 662 ‹Yao To lade out.—In this group the compounds all differ in sound from their primitive, which resembles No. 467 臼 in shape; all being read t'ao.

氣 664 K'i — Air.—These characters are mostly read hi, but show little affinity with the meaning of their primitive; which is an offshoot of No. 38 乞, varied in form.

乘 665 ʂChing — To mount.—These characters are read ching, shing or shăng, but none show much affinity in meaning with the primitive, which resembles No. 456 垂 in its old form.

朕 666 ˂Tăng — A derivative of No. 219 关, resembling 朕 emperor; it is a contracted character, and the radical is placed on its right side, as 縢 &c.; the sounds tăng, shing, ying and ching occur; two or three sub-groups occur.

芻 667 ˂Tseu — Fodder.—Formed like 艸 from two sprouts, this primitive imparts its meaning to few or none of its compounds, which are read tseu, tsiu and chu.

畟 668 ʂYao — Pottery.—This primitive, which is an offshoot of No. 258 缶, is also written 窑; the compounds are all read yao, like it.

桀 669 Kieh, — A brave.—This primitive, No. 838 舜 and No. 844 舞, all contain the same radical; this group bears no affinity to it, and its sounds kich and tsieh are unlike.

留 673 ʂLiu — To detain—Other forms are 畱 and 畄, which puzzle the student, but this is most correct; the derivatives are all read liu.

息 676 Sih, — To pity.—This and the next two resemble each other; these characters are sounded sih.

臭 677 Ch'eu' — Fetid.—Many of these compounds are like their primitive, which resembles the next; they are read chcu, k'eu, and heu or hiu.

臬 678 Nieh, — A target.—The compounds differ from their phonetic in meaning; part of them are read yao.

皋 679 ˂Kao — An eminence.—This is also written 皐 and 臯, with 11 and 12 strokes, which perplexes the search for its compounds, which are read hao and kao.

烏 680 ˂Wu — Black.—This primitive and No. 775 鳥 are easily mistaken, but the greater use of this as a phonetic and that as a radical will help to distinguish the two.

鼻 685 ʂPi — To help.—This group is read pi; the phonetic is sometimes incorrectly written 昆 or 皃, both of which mislead in searching for it.

倉 687 ʂTs'ang — A granary.—Most of these characters are read tsiang, others are chwang or ts'ang; but their meanings are quite unlike.

兼 688 ˂Kien — Together.—This primitive is contracted to 燕 and 兼; its usual sound kien is changed to hien, lien and chan in one third of the derivatives.

益 689 Yih, — Advantage.—The sound yih or i changes to ai, ngai or ngoh in a few words; no uniformity of meaning appears in the group.

翁 690 ˂Wăng — An elder.—Nearly uniform in their sound wăng or ung, most of these words have no sympathy with the meaning of the primitive.

能 692 ʂNăng — Able.—The sounds năng, nai, tai and hiung are all found in this group; No. 986 罷 flows from it.

草 696 ˂Ts'ao — Plants.—This resembles No. 667 芻 in its meaning, both being regarded similar to the radical 艸; its compounds are read ts'ao.

時 697 ʂShi — Time.—This is a derivative of No. 240 寺; its compounds are all read shi, and most of them remotely refer to its meaning.

圂 702 Hwun' — A sty.—This is easily discerned from No. 499 困; the phonetic gives its sound hwun to the compounds.

員 703 ʂYuen — An officer.—This is often contracted to 貟, even in well-printed books; it is like No. 374 冃 in form; the sounds yuen, yun and sun are found.

昷 704 ˂Wăn — Warm.—This is also written 晶 with nine strokes; the sounds of the characters vary from wăn to yun, wuh and ngao; and most of them are in common use.

眾 705 Tah, — A sight of.—Part of these compounds are read tah and part kwan; a sub-group is found under 遝; the primitive bears resemblance to No. 852 衆.

貨 707 ʻSo — Fragments.—This primitive resembles No. 782 巢, and is often written 貲: so is the common sound of the derivatives whose meanings refer to communication.

ELEVEN STROKES.

密 708 Mih, — Secret.—This is a sub-group under No. 132 必 through 宓 one of its compounds, which also forms other groups, all of which are sounded mi or mih.

寅 710 ʂ Yin — To venerate.—The primitive gives its sound yin to most of this group, the exceptions being read yen.

宿 711 Suh, — To l dge at.—Shuh, suh, and siu are the sounds; a glimpse of the primitive appears in some of them.

章 712 ʻChang — Adorned.—The primitive regularly gives its sound to all its compounds, but its meaning to almost none of them.

商 714 Tih, — A root.—This is easily confounded with the next, but their sounds are unlike, these being read tih, tsieh and sheh; 適 forms a small sub-group.

商 715 ʻShang — To consult.—Similar to the last, it is less frequently found in combination, and all the characters follow the sound of shang.

旋 716 ʻSüen — To revert to.—This and the next resemble each other; the sounds of the derivatives are all süen, and their meanings have considerable affinity with it.

族 717 Tsuh, — Kindred.—Similar to the preceding in form, its sounds are unlike it, following the primitive tsuh, except in one or two cases.

庶 718 Shu' — Many.—The compounds are read ché and cheh; one (遮) forms a sub-group, but the primitive imparts nothing to their meanings.

麻 719 ʂ Ma — Rad. 200.—The Chinese found some difficulty in assorting these characters, whose sounds are ma, mo, mi and măn; as many now under the radical, should have been placed under the primitive; No. 1025 靡 makes a sub-group.

庸 720 ʂ Yung — Common.—Part of this group is read jung and others yung; the primitive is contracted to 冂, and often interchanged with No. 327 甬.

鹿 722 Luh, — Rad. 198.—This group and that under the radical are quite unlike; these are all read luh but one, 塵 chin, which forms two compounds.

离 724 ʻLi — To separate.—Part are read chi, but more are li; one derivative 離 leads a sub-group of 12 characters, most of them synonymous forms.

率 726 Shwai' — A leader.—This primitive has four sounds itself; its compounds are read lüh, soh and shwai, none of them bearing much likeness to it in meaning.

郭 727 Kwoh, — A suburb.—This is derived from No. 396 享, with which some of its compounds are interchanged; they are read kwoh; its shape resembles No. 802 敦 and the next.

羞 730 ʻSiu — Ashamed.—This resembles No. 629 差, but it occurs less frequently; the sounds are all siu, and the meanings unlike the primitive.

雲 731 ʂ Yü — Rainbow.—This heads a sub-group under No. 19 亏, none of which bear much likeness to it in meaning, and the sounds are yü, shu and hu.

舂 732 ʻShung — To triturate.—This and No. 520 舂 look much alike, but this is the least common; most of the compounds are read chwang, ch'ung and shwang.

彗 733 Sui' — A besom.—The sounds here are hwui, sui and süeh; those read hwui often interchange with No. 820 惠, from similarity of sound.

規 734 ʻKwei — A rule.—Most of the characters in this group are read kwei, others are hwei; their meanings sometimes show traces of the primitive.

責 735 Tseh, — To blame.—The sound tseh changes into tsih, tsz' and chai in a large proportion of the derivatives, whose meanings exhibit little affinity with each other.

烈 736 ʂ Li — To split.—This is an obsolete character, which gives its sound li to most of the compounds, though its meaning to none.

殹 737 I' — An echo.—A homophonous group read i; many of the characters exhibit the idea of blackness.

戚 738 Tsih, — Troubled.—This group is read tsih and tsuh, and many words in it are allied to the primitive in sense as well as sound.

敖 741 Ngao' — Proud.—Nearly uniform in its sound ngao, the others are read ao or yao and chui; a few resemble the primitive in sense.

執 742 Chih, — To take.—This is like No. 744 埶 and No. 728 孰, but occurs more frequently; most of the words are read chih or chi, and others tien.

殸 743 King' — Sounding stones.—The sounds are king, hing and shing; this character is obsolete, and often contracted to 声 for its compound 磬.

埶 744 I' — Apt.—These derivatives are read i, sieh, jeh and shi; it closely resembles No. 742 執, and the two are often confounded even by natives.

匿 745 Nih, — Hidden.—This group is read nih, with the exception of 慝 teh; the compounds show some traces of the phonetic in their meaning.

斬 747 ʻChan — To decapitate.—The sounds here vary from chan to tsan and tsien; 漸 leads a sub-group of three.

區 749 ˊK'ü — A place.—The sounds here change from k'ü into yü, kèu, ngao and ch'u; their meanings are altogether diverse.

曹 751 ˊTs'ao — Dignity.—All the compounds are read ts'ao, like their phonetic, though few are influenced by it in their signification.

票 752 ˊPiao — To signalize.—A large and regular group in its uniform sound of piao; a few compounds, as 剽 and 漂, lead small sub-groups.

泰 754 Tsih, — Varnish.—This primitive resembles the radicals 麥 wheat and 黍 millet, but those do not occur as phonetics; this group is read tsih and sih.

莽 758 ˊMan — Equal.—This somewhat resembles 兩 a couple, or altered to 莽; the compounds are read man and măn.

强 759 ˊK'iang — Violent.—The phonetic gives its sound k'iang to all under it; the form 強 is commonly used, but is still reckoned as having only eleven strokes.

尉 760 Wéi' — To console.—This gives its sound to most of its compounds; they are read wéi or yuh.

扇 761 Lew' — To leak.—A small group, uniformly read leu, and many of its characters analogous to the primitive, which is contracted to 扇 in poor books.

翏 763 Liu' — To fly high.—The leading sound is liu, but liao, lao, luh, kiao, kiu, miu and cheu are also heard, rendering them all doubtful to a beginner.

造 766 Tsao' — To make.—This sub-group comes from No. 342 告; its derivatives are uniformly sounded tsao.

昜 767 ˊShang — An offshoot from No. 592 易, and an idea of injury runs through the group; the sounds are shang, then tsiang and tang.

祭 768 Tsi' — To sacrifice.—About half of this group is read tsi, and the others chi, chai, tsai, si and chah; a sub-group of seven comes under 察 chah.

扈 769 Hu' — To follow.—These few characters are read hu, like their phonetic; but are unlike it in meaning, and not much in use.

從 771 ˊT'sung — To follow.—This and the two next are similar; half of this group follow the sound ts'ung, others are read sung and chwang.

徙 773 ˊSi — To transport.—The derivatives are read si and sien; the primitive is like No. 771 從, but it does not influence the meaning of the words.

逢 774 ˊFung — To meet.—This flows from No. 348 夆, with which its compounds agree in sound, and often in sense; nearly one half are read fung, the rest pung.

鳥 775 ˊNiao — Rad. 196.—The sounds vary to tiao, ming and niao; this and No. 680 烏 resemble each other.

既 776 Ki' — Already.—The compounds in this group are read ki, kai and keu; the primitive resembles No. 575 卽, but is more used.

兜 777 ˊTeu — A helmet.—The few derivatives under this primitive have no affinity with its meaning, but are all sounded teu.

殺 778 Shah, — To kill.—The compounds are read sah and shah, and the original meaning crops out in some of them.

參 780 ˊTs'an — A counsellor.—This is occasionally interchanged with No. 813 晉, and altered to 叅 and 参; the compounds are read tsan, san, shan, shăn and chăn, and most of them have some reference to confusion.

巢 782 ˊCh'ao — A nest.—This resembles No. 707 貿; the characters mostly follow their leading sound ch'ao, tsiao and sao being the variants.

虖 784 ˊHu — A groan.—This is a sub-group from No. 162 乎, and the characters follow its sound hu with a few exceptions which are read h'ia.

鹵 787 ˊLu — Rad. 197.—All the derivatives with one exception, king, are read lu, and the primitive conveys its meaning to only one of them.

莫 788 Moh, — Not.—The radical is usually written beneath the primitive, and in a few cases as 摸 and 幕, 謨 and 暮 its position varies the sense; the derivatives are read moh, mu and ma.

婁 789 ˊLeu — Poor.—This group is mostly read leu; others are lü, and one 數 shu, forms a sub-group No. 984.

曼 790 ˊMan — Long.—The phonetic gives its sound man to this group, but no clue to the meanings, except in one or two cases.

異 792 I' — Remarkable.—The sounds in this group are i, yih, făn and chih; 翼 leads a sub-group of four; in K'anghi's Dictionary this character is reckoned under twelve strokes.

累 793 ˊLéi — To involve.—About one half of this group is read lo, the rest are léi and tah; the primitive is akin to No. 881 雷 and No. 985 畾, with which it is sometimes interchanged.

患 795 Hwan' Sorrow.—Hwan, wan and chan are the only sounds; the primitive is sometimes wrongly written for No. 928 睘.

崔 796 ˏ*Tsui* A peak.—This is very similar to No. 626 雚, and the two are not carefully separated in books; it is like 雀 a bird, which is made from No. 472 隹.

TWELVE STROKES.

渠 797 K'ü A gutter.—The sound of this is given by No. 144 巨 with which it has no other affinity.

湯 798 ˏ*Tang* To scald.—This is derived from No. 592 昜, and all its compounds follow its sound tang but not its sense.

戠 799 Chih, To burn.—This has become obsolete and is sometimes pedantically written 戠, with thirteen strokes; the sounds are chih, chi and shih.

童 800 ˏ*T'ung* A youth.—The sounds are t'ung, chung and chwang; its sound and form resemble No. 558 重, with which it is never interchanged.

散 801 Cheh, This is now obsolete, and its derivatives are read cheh and sah; it resembles No. 825 散 and is still less like No. 815 敢.

敦 802 ˏ*Tun* Sincere.—This heads the largest sub-group under No. 396 享, of which No. 727 郭 and No. 728 孰 are two others; the sounds are tun and tui.

就 803 Tsiu' Then.—This is derived from No. 397 京, but has no likeness to it in sound or sense; the words are tsiu and tsuh.

善 804 ˏ*Shen* Good.—This phonetic gives its sound ˏ*shen*, but has no appreciable influence on the sense of the compounds; it differs from No. 818 喜.

粦 805 ˏ*Lin* Will-o'-wisp.—This guides to the sounds of all its compounds except three read lien; and an idea of frangibility runs through many of them.

勞 806 ˏ*Lao* Fatigue.—This is a derivative from No. 614 焱; the compounds all follow its sound, but rarely its signification.

心 807 ˏ*Jui* To suspect.—This is also written 𢎘 in most of its compounds, but the second form alone is a synonym of 譟 sih; jui is the common sound.

貳 808 'Rh' Two.—This comes secondarily from No. 25 弋, under which 式 is a simpler form of this character; this group is read 'rh, ni and ch'i.

絜 809 Kieh, Pure.—This and No. 567 契 are derived from No. 256 丰; its compounds are mostly read kieh, and some of them are akin in meaning.

寮 811 ˏ*Liao* To light.—A group whose members are read liao and lao, but their meanings vary indefinitely.

奢 812 ˏ*Shé* Prodigal.—This is derived from No. 531 者, which sends off four or five sub-groups, of which this is the largest; its compounds are read ché and cha, and are written sometimes with No. 529 奓.

昏 813 ˏ*Tsan* Impious.—This is often interchanged with No. 780 參 and No. 1028 贊; it is also incorrectly written 朁, which itself leads a group of three; the compounds are read tsan, tsien, chăn and ti.

壹 814 Yih, One.—This group is sounded yih, i and ngai; the words exhibit no likeness in meaning.

敢 815 ˏ*Kan* To dare.—The sounds here vary from kan to han and hien; its nearest resemblances are No. 801 散 and No. 825 散.

喜 818 ˏ*Hi* Joy.—This resembles No. 804 善; the sounds are all hi, except two or three read ch'i.

惡 819 Ngoh, Evil.—This, derived from No. 424 亞, is read both wu and ngoh; its compounds are found under both sounds, and partake of its meaning.

惠 820 Hwui' Grace.—This group frequently interchanges its phonetic with 恵 a sub-group of No. 733 彗; the sounds are hwéi and sui.

棻 821 ˏ*Fan* A hedge.—These are all read fan, as well as the larger sub-group under 樊, to which belong eight compounds.

覃 822 ˏ*T'an* Ample.—This differs from No. 867 單, though they are interchanged; besides the sound t'an, a few are read tien and sin.

斯 823 ˏ*Sz'* This.—Apparently derived from No. 435 其, this primitive exhibits no likeness in sound or sense to it; a few are read si, but most of them sz'.

黃 824 ˏ*Hwang* Rad. 201.—The derivatives are mostly read hwang, and others hăng; No. 996 廣 is a sub-group.

散 825 Sun' To scatter.—This is so much like No. 801 散 that some notice is desirable of their differences; sah, sien and san are the sounds.

項 827 Hiang' A sort.—This group follows the sound of its primitive, which resembles 頃 k'iurg, a word that has four derivatives, 傾 and 頃 being the most common.

斋 828 Yuh, To deceive.—The sounds here are yuh, küeh, hüch and küh, and modifications of these; the meanings are incongruous.

尋 829 ˏ*Sin* To seek.—These compounds are read sin and t'an; none of them indicate any influence of the primitive on their meanings.

閔 830 ˏ*Min* Pity.—This group is alike read min; the primitive is derived from No. 56 文 rather than No. 439 門.

閏 831 Jun' Intercalary moon.—These characters are read both jun and jwan, the primitive has both sounds; its form resembles the last and the next.

閒 832 ˏ*Hien* Leisure.—As a primitive, this is also written 間 and 閑, though these three forms are not wholly synonymous; the sounds are about equally hien and kien.

孱 833 ˏ*Chw'en* Weak.—The compounds, which are mostly read ch'an, show no influence of the primitive, which is sometimes interchanged with No. 437 戔.

巽 834 Sun' To concede.—This group has many sounds, as sun, siün, chwen, tsüen and tswan; the meanings have nothing in common.

筑 836 Chuh, — A guitar.—This derivative from No. 250 巩 is incorrectly written without the dot; most of the compounds are arranged in Kanghi's Dictionary under the 竹 radical.

答 837 Tah, — To reply.—This is often contracted to 荅 in the compounds, which are read tah and chah; it is derived from No. 285 合, being one of its five sub-groups.

舜 838 Shun, — This group furnishes one character read chwen, and the others are shun; all are in common use.

爲 839 Wéi, — To be.—The sound of wéi is heard in nearly half of this group, the others being read hwéi, wo and kwéi; 蔿 forms a small sub-group.

番 840 ⟨Fān — Foreign.—This is sometimes improperly written 番; some of its compounds are read shin, fan, pan and p'o; No. 963 審 leads a sub-group.

登 841 ⟨Tăng — To ascend.—This resembles 登 tăng a vase, which forms only one or two compounds; this group is mostly read tăng, others are chăng and ching.

發 842 Fah, — To issue.—This group is read fah, féi and poh or puh; 癹 leads a sub-group of four read féi like itself.

毳 843 Ts'uí — Down.—Half of these are read tsui or chui, and the rest chwen and kiao; no influence of the primitive on their meanings is perceptible.

無 844 ⟩Wu — None.—This is occasionally interchanged with No. 404 武; its compounds are read wu, hu and fu, and some of them as 蕪 and 廡 lead others; a character like this 舞 also heads a group of six, read wu.

喬 845 ⟩K'iao — Grand.—This character, derived from No. 622 高, influences many of its compounds, indicating lofty, noble, &c; the common sound k'iao is changed to kioh in a few.

象 848 Siang, — Elephant.—Only one of these, read shang, differs in sound from the primitive, which bears a resemblance to No. 852 彖.

復 849 Fuh, — Repeating.—One of this group is read li, and the others fuh; the primitive comes from No. 514 复, with which it is interchanged in a few cases.

焦 850 ⟨Tsiao — Scorched.—This may be regarded as derived from No. 472 隹, and its derivatives are all read tsiao; their significations have a little affinity with it.

集 851 Tsih, — To congregate.—These are read tsah and tsih, and one of the three is a synonym of the primitive.

衆 852 Chung, — A crowd.—Traces of the meaning of the phonetic, which gives its sound chung to all the derivatives, occur in several of them.

翕 853 Hih, — United.—Like No. 837 荅, this is derived from No. 285 合; it may easily be confounded with No. 698 翁; the compounds are read hih.

尊 854 ⟨Tsun — Illustrious.—This group follows the primitive in its sound tsun, but not at all in meaning; it resembles No. 748 專.

曾 855 ⟨Ts'ăng — Already.—This and No. 912 會 are easily mistaken, and this is usually written 曾 to diminish their likeness; the derivatives are read tsăng and săng.

幾 856 ⟨Kí — Several.—This regularly follows its phonetic ki; in a few cases, like 譏 the primitive is abbreviated, but oftener to 几, as 机 for 機, &c.

觜 859 ⟨Tsui — A beak.—This group is pronounced tsui like its phonetic, which influences the meanings of the compounds.

華 860 ⟩Hwa — Flowery.—This is often contracted to ten strokes 華 as it is a sound character, but the dictionaries place the words under twelve; they are read hwa, yeh or yih and wéi.

莽 861 ⟨Mang — Flourishing.—This word is troublesome to find, for it is contracted to 莽 and 莽, but the dictionaries place such under twelve strokes; they are read mang.

景 863 ⟨King — A prospect—This like No. 803 就 is an offshoot of No. 397 京; the sounds under it vary into ying, kiüng, hung and hao.

最 864 Tsuí — Important.—This is a derivative from No. 417 取; the compounds are read tsoh, chwai and tsui.

路 865 Lu, — A road.—This is derived from No. 272 各, and the characters are all read lu like the phonetic, of whose meaning there is no trace in them.

貴 866 Kwéi, — Honored.—Two derivatives under this, 匱 and 遺, form sub-groups, and the former is often interchanged with it; they are mostly read kwéi, others are tui, i and wéi.

單 867 ⟩Tan — Alone.—This is not unlike No. 822 單 in form and sound; the compounds are mostly read tan, then chen, shen, toh and ti.

業 869 Puh, — Thicket.—This and No. 930 業 resemble each other; the compounds here are all read puh or poh.

敞 870 ⟨Ch'ang — Spacious.—This offset from No. 501 尙 has a few characters under it which follow its sound ch'ang; it is easily confounded with the next.

敝 871 ⟨Pí — Broken.—This is like the last and more common; most of the characters are read pieh, then pi, and ideas of injury pervade most of them.

THIRTEEN STROKES.

意 872 I, — Intention.—The group of characters which flow from this primitive are all read i or yih, and many of them partake of its meaning.

鷹 873 ⟨Chai — A griffon.—This resembles No. 839 爲 a little, but it and its derivatives are seldom met; they are read chai and tsien.

雁 874 ⟨Ying — A hawk.—This is easily mistaken for 雁 a wild goose, but the latter seldom occurs; its derivatives are all read ying, and 應 leads a sub-group.

廉 875 ˊLien — Frugality.—A derivative of No. 688 兼, with which it is rarely interchanged; this primitive gives its sound lien to all but two of its compounds read chan and tswan, but its meaning to none.

雍 876 ˊYung — Concord.—This is also written 邕, and 雝, but these forms are not common; their sounds are yung and wăng.

贏 877 ˊLo — An obsolete character, where the radical is found between the lower parts, as 贏; the characters are read lo, lei and ying.

稟 878 ˊPin — To state to.—This group derives its sound from lin 稟 a granary, and the two are considred the same primitive; the derivatives are read lin and lan.

亶 879 ˊTan — Grand.—This is often interchanged with No. 867 單 from the similarity of sound; these are read tan, shen and chen.

雷 881 ˊLêi — Thunder.—This and No. 985 靁 resemble each other in sound; this group is read lêi, and the derivatives occasionally intimate the meaning of the primitive.

蚤 882 *Tsah*ˌ — Sordid.—This is derived from Rad. 179 韭; its compounds are read tsah and sah, and partake somewhat of its meaning.

遺 883 ˊSui — To follow.—This sub-group under No. 522 有, is frequently interchanged with it, and its derivatives are read sui; one of them 隨 has six flowing from it.

惑 884 ˊKan — To excite.—A derivative from No. 524 咸; the characters in this group are read kan and han, and many of them partake of the sense of their phonetic.

達 885 *Tah*ˌ — To perceive.—This is not an offshoot from No. 416 幸, but from 羍 altered; all its compounds are read tah.

聖 886 *Shing*ˋ — Holy.—This is a sub-group under No. 373 呈, and is often contracted to 圣; its derivatives are read ch'ing or ch'ăng.

賁 887 *Fän*ˋ — Bold.—This is apparently derived from 卉 plants, but the sound indicates No. 528 奔 as its origin; the sounds păn and fän are curiously confused in the group.

戮 888 *Tieh*ˌ — Sharp.—This was at first written 戮, but this is now the proper form, and is also contracted as in 鉄; all are read tieh.

敲 889 *Kih*ˌ — To strike.—The compounds in this group are read kih and hi; they have little likeness of meaning.

畺 890 ˊKiang — A border.—Occasionally interchanged with No. 759 强, and most of the compounds are sounded kiang; 疆 leads three or four derivatives.

禁 892 *Kin*ˋ — To prohibit.—This group comes from No. 432 林, with which it has little affinity; the compounds are read kin, and look a little like the next.

楚 893 ˊCh'u — Grievous.—These characters sound like their phonetic, which resembles the preceding; they all contain the idea of suffering.

嗇 894 *Sheh*ˌ — Avaricious.—This is contracted to 啬, and its compounds are read sheh, seh and ts'iang; several of them partake of its meaning.

幹 895 *Kan*ˋ — Ability.—This forms one of three sub-groups under No. 653 倝; its derivatives are read kan and hwan.

肅 896 *Suh*ˌ — Serious.—This properly has thirteen strokes, but the characters are placed under twelve in the dictionaries; they are read suh, siu and siao; 蕭 forms a sub-group of eight.

辟 898 *Pih*ˌ — A model.—The meaning of this phonetic appears in several of its compounds, which are read pi, pih, poh and mih; the group is easily distinguished from No. 1014 辞.

翌 899 *Sheh*ˌ — Rough.—In the dictionaries, this is counted with twelve strokes, while it really has fourteen, and this discrepancy causes some difficulty in finding it; the compounds partake of its meaning and are sounded seh and sah.

愛 900 *Ngai*ˋ — To love.—This group is uniformly read ngai or ai; most of its characters have the idea of obscurity.

徽 903 ˊWêi — Minute.—This can be easily mistaken for No. 977 徵; its compounds are read wêi or wi, and a few of them are like it in meaning.

雋 904 ˊTsüen — Fat.—This group contains the sounds tswan, tsui, tsüen, and tsun; No. 1003 鳥 forms a sub-group.

臭 905 *Hioh*ˌ — An imperfect character, to which No. 953 臭 bears most likeness; the compounds are read hioh, kioh, hoh and hung; it is often contracted, as 孝 for 學 in poorly-printed books.

毀 906 ˊHwêi — To break.—This leads the sounds of its compounds, and traces of its meaning are seen in several of them.

敬 907 *Kih*ˌ — To respect.—The four sounds of this primitive reappear in its compounds, as kih, yao, hih, hoh, kioh and kiao, the last the commonest; this and No. 741 敖 look alike.

奧 908 *Ngao*ˋ — Obscure.—The derivatives in this group are read ngao and yuh; it resembles 粵, which has only three derivatives read yueh.

禽 909 ˊK'in — Birds.—This group is read k'in; its meanings have no likeness; this and No. 724 离 resemble each other.

遂 910 *Sui*ˋ — To follow.—This is sometimes mistaken for 逐 which has itself seven derivatives read chuh like it; these are all read sui.

僉 911 ˊTs'ien — All.—The sounds under this primitive are tsien, sien, yen, hien, kien and lien, of which the last preponderates.

會 912 *Hwui*ˋ — To assemble.—This and No. 855 會 are liable to be confounded; half of the characters in this group are read kwêi; the others hwui, wêi and kwai.

鄉 913 ˊHiang — A village.—A small group read hiang, whose phonetic is liable to be mistaken for 卿 k'ing, but that has no derivatives.

當 914 ˊTang — Ought.—This is a sub-group under No. 501 尚; it is frequently contracted to 当 in cheap books; all the compounds are read tang, but their meanings follow their radicals.

虡 915 *Kü*ˋ — Fighting.—This primitive which resembles 處 a place, gives its sound to most of its compounds, of which others are read kioh and kih; two of them lead two or three derivates each.

虘 916 ‹Hü — A vase.—This phonetic is similar to No. 785 虘 and No. 857 虛; the compounds are all read hi, and the most common one 戲 leads thirteen derivatives also read hì.

虜 917 ‹Lu — To captivate.—This primitive, No. 981 慮 and No. 999 盧 resemble each other in sound and form; the group is read lu throughout.

粲 918 Ts'an› — Fresh.—This is rather a sub-group of tsan 奴, which leads four other derivatives as 餐 and 粲; not many of either group are in common use.

歲 919 Sui› — A year.—The sounds in this group are kwéi, hwui, wéi and yueh; the primitive is contracted to 岁 and other forms.

萬 921 Wan› — A myriad.—This offshoot from No. 598 禺, itself reappears in a sub-group, No. 970 厲; its derivatives are read wan, tun and mai.

黽 922 ‹Min — Rad. 205.—This group is read min, yin, ying and shing or shăng; it is easily to be distinguished from that under the radical.

喿 923 Sao› — Birds singing.—In this group, the compounds are read sao, tsiao and tsao, mostly the latter; the idea of discord appears in many of them.

過 924 Kwo› — Overpassing.—This comes from No. 605 咼, and imparts its sound kwo to half of its derivatives, the others being read chwa.

農 925 ‹Nung — To farm.—This group is mostly read nung, then nang and nao; many of the characters relate to density or thickening.

豐 926 Li› — A vase.—This is used as a contracted form of No. 1021 豐, but as a phonetic has no likeness to it, all the derivatives being read li or t'i.

睪 927 Yih, — To direct.—This is derived indirectly from No. 416 幸, and one compound 擇 has three or four under it; the sounds are yih, i, shih, tseh and tŏh.

叡 928 ‹Küng — Delicate.—This and No. 555 爰 are sometimes interchanged; its compounds are read hwan, hüen, pien, yuen, shwan and süen; some of them have one or two derivatives.

蜀 929 Shuh, — An insect.—The characters in this group are read chuh, choh, tuh and shuh; No. 1037 屬 is an offset, and one or two other sub-groups are found.

業 930 Yeh, — Patrimony.—This resembles No. 869 業, and is comparatively a small group, whose members are read both yeh and nieh in some parts of the country.

FOURTEEN STROKES.

寧 931 ‹Ning — Happy.—This being a sacred character is contracted to 寧 with ten strokes; its compounds are read ning and năng in equal proportions.

賓 932 ‹Pin — A guest.—This is often changed to 宾 as being more easily written; the words are read pin or pien.

辨 933 ‹Pien — Recrimination.—This is derived from No. 296 辛 by duplication; its compounds are read pien and pan, and most of them are placed under the 160th radical.

齊 934 ‹Tsi — Rad. 210.—Many of the characters which properly come under this phonetic are placed under the radical in Kanghi's Dictionary; the derivatives here are read tsi and chai.

豪 935 ‹Hao — Heroic.—The characters in this group are read hao; the primitive flows from No. 622 高, and is somewhat like it.

需 936 ‹Sü — Necessary.—This primitive, also written 需, is sometimes interchanged with No. 847 須, which it resembles in sound and sense; it flows from No. 527 耎, and the compounds are read jü, 'rh, neu and sü.

爾 937 ,Rh — You.—This is contracted to 尔 in composition; the derivatives are read 'rh, lo, mi, nai, ni, ching, nieh, si and sien; 彌 has six derivatives.

臧 938 ‹Tsang — Just.—One derivative under this 藏 has four under it, which and the others are all read tsang.

厭 939 ‹Yen — To dislike.—This is read both yen and yeh, and its compounds are read yen, yeh and yah, chiefly the first; their meanings show some traces of the primitive.

壽 942 Sheu› — Longevity.—This group contains the sounds cheu, tao and chu, but none sheu; the primitive is written in many ways.

截 943 Tsieh, — Intercepted.—This resembles No. 1010 戴 and is also written 截; its derivatives are all read tsieh.

赫 944 Hoh, — Glistening.—Formed by duplicating Rad. 155 赤, whose meaning it has partially kept; the words are read hoh and hia.

臺 945 ‹Tai — A terrace.—This group follows the sound tai of its phonetic, which is often contracted to No. 186 台, and also to 薹 with thirteen strokes.

監 946 ‹Kien — To examine.—An offshoot from No. 429 臤, this primitive has affinity with its derivative No. 995 覽; the sounds are kien, yen, hien, but chiefly lan.

盡 947 Tsin› — Completed.—All but one 燼 nai of this group are read tsin, and there is much affinity with the primitive in their meanings.

耤 950 Tsih, — To cultivate.—This is derived from No. 436 昔, and its compounds are all read tsih.

熏 951 ‹Hiün — Steam.—The compounds under this character are read hiün and hüen; it has no affinity with No. 558 重, nor will No. 1032 黨 be taken for it.

疑 952 ‹I — Suspicion.—This conveys its own sound i to about half its compounds, the rest being read ngai, ying, chi and hai, and some having two or three sounds.

與 953 ‹Yü — To give.—This resembles No. 905 興, but still more the word 與 hing, which has four derivatives read like it; this group is read yu, kü and sü.

䜌 955 Kü› — To connect.—Part of these characters are read ki, and others twan; some of them are like the primitive, which is contracted to 迷.

蔑 957 Hwoh, To measure.—This flows from 隻 chih, which has also 雙 shwang as one derivative, and No. 1033 爰 as another; 艸 is frequently wrongly written so as to cover the whole characters as 護; the sounds are hwoh and woh, hu and hwa.

賏 959 *Ying*ˋ A necklace.—This is formed of Rad. 154 貝 repeated, and has its derivative in No. 1015 嬰; they are all read ying.

㬎 960 ˊ*Hien* Manifest.—This has been superseded by its common derivative 顯, which itself has a few offshoots; the sounds under it are hien, shih, sih and ngan.

遣 961 ˊ*K'ien* To send.—This primitive resembles No. 682 追, but is not an offset from it; the derivatives are all read kien, but show no likeness in sense to the primitive.

對 962 *Tui*ˋ To match.—This is constantly contracted to 对; all the compounds are as much used as their leader, whose sound tui they follow.

FIFTEEN STROKES.

寫 964 ˊ*Sié* To write.—This group is read sié; its characters are little in use.

廚 965 ˏ*Ch'u* A kitchen.—This and No. 817 彭 both come from 壹 chu, a band of music; 尌 has also three or four common derivatives, read chu and shu; this primitive is very often written 厨 under 14 strokes.

廣 966 ˊ*Kwang* Broad.—This comes from No. 824 黃, and its compounds are read kwang, kung and kwoh; one or two exhibit some analogy to it.

廮 967 ˊ*Piao* Iridescent.—This seems to flow from No. 722 鹿; in composition it interchanges with 票 and 表 in a few cases, and all the derivatives are read piao.

廛 968 ˊ*Ch'en* A shop.—This is often wrongly written, as if the lower part was 墨 ink, but the two are unlike; this group is read chăn and chĕn.

賣 973 *Mai*ˋ To sell.—This comes from No. 868 買, but its sounds are not so uniform as that; most of them are tuh, then yuh, shuh, teu, tih and mai; their meanings vary greatly.

質 975 Chih, Essential.—This leads the sounds of its derivatives, a few changing from chih to chi; it is contracted to 质 even in good printing.

徵 977 ˊ*Ching* To prove.—This is sometimes contracted to 征 in combination, and resembles No. 903 微; the derivatives are read ching and chi.

樂 978 Loh, Pleasure.—The characters in this group are read loh, yoh and shoh, but mostly lih; their meanings often refer to splendor; 藥 leads three derivatives.

鼠 980 Lieh, Bristles.—The derivatives in this group are read lieh and lah; in common books it is contracted, as 蜡 for 蠟 and one or two others.

慮 981 *Lü*ˋ To reflect.—This primitive resembles No. 917 虜 and No. 999 盧 in its general form, and shows some affinity in sound with them both.

蔑 982 Mieh, To exterminate.—Some of these derivatives show a little affinity with their primitive; most of them are read mieh and wah.

暴 983 *Pao*ˋ Cruel.—This gives its sound pao to half of its compounds, and the others are read poh; they frequently show some trace of its many meanings.

數 984 *Shu*ˋ Number.—This is an offshoot of No. 789 婁; its compounds are read shu, seu and soh, and show no similarity to the meaning of either.

畾 985 ˏ*Lei* Fields.—This group and those under No. 793 累 and No. 881 雷 are alike read léi, and their compounds are often interchanged; 纍 has 12 derivatives, and 壘 has six, beside others; 田 is contracted often to 又 as 叕, even in well-printed books.

罷 986 *Pa*ˋ To stop.—This flows from No. 692 能, and is often contracted to 罢 in common books; its sounds are pa, pi, péi and pai.

SIXTEEN STROKES.

憲 987 *Hien*ˋ Grandees.—This primitive somewhat resembles No. 872 意, but the group is quite unlike; one character is read lin, and the others hien.

親 988 ˏ*Ts'in* Near.—Half of this character is sometimes wrongly written 辛, which is a synonym of 榛 the hazel; the derivatives are read ch'hăn throughout.

龍 989 ˏ*Lung* Rad. 212.—The group placed under this radical contains many in which it is properly phonetic; the prevailing sound is lung, with a few read chung, pang, sih and cheh.

襄 990 ˏ*Hwai* To emboson.—This character is contracted to 裹 in composition; its derivatives are read hwai, and 壞 leads a group of three.

鴦 991 ˏ*Täng* To ascend.—This flows from No. 219 关, and in sound is like No. 666 滕, and seems to be a contraction of one of its compounds; the group is read täng throughout.

霍 992 Hoh, Sudden.—This group resembles No. 626 雚 in sound, and No. 948 翟 in appearance; it is read hoh, but the compounds are not much used.

歷 993 Lih, Generations.—This is often written 歷 under 14 strokes, but the dictionaries follow this form; it is also contracted to 厤 as in 麷, when the radical is underneath; all are read lih.

靈 994 Ngoh, Simple.—This is constantly interchanged with No. 603 𠙵, both forms being regarded as correct; the sounds are all ngoh.

賴 996 Laiˋ To trust.—This is often contracted in composition to No. 535 剌, and the right side is also written like 頁; its derivatives are read lai, lah, tah and lan.

燕 997 Yenˋ A swallow.—This and No. 846 然 are often taken for each other; the words in this group are read yen like the phonetic.

盧 999 ˊ*Lu* Black.—Many derivatives under this character partake of its meaning, and all but three read lü follow its sound; it resembles No. 917 虜 and No. 981 慮 in form and sound.

戇 1000 Hiaiˋ Courageous.—This group conforms in its sound hiaì to its phonetic; the characters seldom occur and are diverse in meaning.

縣 1002 Hienˋ Suspend.—These characters are read hüen, one of the sounds of the primitive, of which one of the three is a synonym.

SEVENTEEN STROKES.

霜 1007 ˊ*Shwang* Hoar-frost.—A derivative from No. 538 相, the sounds are uniformly shwang; it is frequently interchanged with No. 739 爽.

聯 1008 ˋ*Lien* To connect.—This flows from 絲, which itself has a few other derivatives as 關 and 聯; this group is read lien and lin.

戩 1010 ˊ*Tsien* Minced.—This can be mistaken for No. 943 截, from which it differs in sound; the derivatives are read tsien, chan, tsan and sien.

鮮 1012 ˊ*Sien* Fresh.—A homophonous group read sien; the primitive is not unlike No. 998 穌 in form but not in sound.

龠 1013 Yohˋ Rad. 214.—The characters with this in it as a radical resemble each other in sense, and those under it as a phonetic are alike in sound, except yü; 籥 has four derivatives.

薛 1014 Siehˋ A fault.—These characters are read sieh and yeh; the primitive is not derived from No. 898 辟 which resembles it in construction.

嬰 1015 ˊ*Ying* An infant.—This is one of the derivatives from No. 959 賏; its compounds are all read ying, but their meanings have no connection.

EIGHTEEN STROKES.

竄 1016 Ts'wanˋ To conceal.—The characters in this group are all read tsw'an: they must not be confounded with those under No. 980 鼠 read lah.

雜 1017 Tsahˋ Mixed.—This is indirectly derived from No. 851 集, and is a little like No. 1027 難; its compounds are all read tsah.

歸 1020 ˊ*Kwei* To return—This primitive leads its small company with its own sound kwéi, but gives none of them any of its meaning.

豐 1021 ˊ*Fung* Abundant.—This and No. 926 豊 are constantly interchanged with each other, but not quite correctly; the sounds fung and yen are the usual ones in this group.

鞏 1022 Kwanˋ An iris.—About one half of these characters have the sound kwan, the rest are hwan; it is contracted to 𠦂 in rapid writing.

瞿 1023 Küˋ To dread.—This and No. 1034 爨 differ a little in form, and altogether in sound, this group being read kü throughout.

NINETEEN STROKES.

纞 1024 ˋ*Lüen* To bind.—In some of the common derivatives, this primitive is contracted to No. 212 as 恋 for 戀; the sounds are chiefly lüen or lwan, then wan, man, shwan and pien; two or three small sub-groups are formed from it.

靡 1025 ˊ*Mi* Without.—This is an offshoot from No. 719 麻, and some of its derivatives are interchanged with those; all here are read mi.

麗 1026 Liˋ Elegant.—This is derived from No. 722 鹿; in some characters it is contracted to No. 247 丙 or No. 724 禹 and even to 丽 the upper half; the compounds are read li, si, sz and shai.

難 1027 ˋ*Nan* Difficult.—This is in form an offshoot from No. 756 𦰩, the derivatives are read nan, no, ni and tan, some of them having two sounds.

贊 1028 Tsanˋ To help.—This is also written 賛 and 贊, which perplexes the student as to the proper number of strokes; the last contraction resembles No. 813 朁, with which it is sometimes interchanged; this group is read tsan, tswan and tsah.

顛 1029 ˊ*Tien* Summit.—This is derived from No. 674 眞, and agrees with it in sound; the compounds are read tien, and show a little likeness in signification.

邊 1030 ʻPien — Side.—This is properly a sub-group of 臱, which itself has six derivatives, some under both being interchangeable, and all read pien.

嚴 1035 ʂYen — Severe.—This primitive may be regarded as derived from No. 815 敢, with which it has no likeness in sound or sense; a few derivatives are read ngan, most of them yen.

TWENTY-ONE STROKES.

屬 1037 Shuh; — Appertaining.—This flows from No. 929 蜀, and is often contracted to 属; the derivatives are read chuh and shuh.

TWENTY-TWO STROKES.

TWENTY-FOUR STROKES.

贛 1039 Kung? — To donate.—This primitive seems to come from No. 646 貢, but its derivatives are read kung, kan and chwang, and its parts contracted to 赣 in some cases.

靈 1040 ʂLing — Spirit.—This is contracted to No. 182 仝 and 雲 or 零, but not indiscriminately; the derivatives are read ling.

Those who are curious to follow the manner in which these primitives unite to form groups and sub-groups of derivatives, will easily be able to do so by running one or two through the radicals It will soon be perceived how far they really serve as phonetics now, and how cautious one must be in deducing the sound from the primitive, especially of words in the juh shing. This combination of radicals and primitives is easily paralleled in other languages, especially in Greek and German, whose facility of compounding and decompounding roots and prefixes gives them such power and variety of expression. If there was a possibility or use in a universal language, in which mankind could convey their thoughts irrespective of the sound of the symbols, the Chinese seems to be the best fitted for it, inasmuch as the system of combination here explained is susceptible of infinite development to express almost any name or idea.

Out of this whole number 106 characters are either imperfect, contracted forms, not in use, or such as are rarely met with, leaving 934 common characters, most of which occur as often as any of their compounds. One advantage of learning this list, is the readiness it gives the student in reckoning the number of strokes in a character. When it has only a few strokes as 抽, 供 or 貂, there is no hesitation in the search; but when their number is over twelve, as in 嚀, 驛 or 攝, it saves much time to know at sight, that they are to be found under 14, 13, or 21 strokes respectively. It is easy to ascertain the strokes by inspection, after becoming familiar with their construction, and is more rapid than to count them. For instance, 嚼 is composed of 口 mouth joined to 爵 the 256th primitive, and 齒 the 211th radical, making 21 strokes, under which number it is placed. In others, like 攜, or 彌 or 劇, where the component parts are not so easily separable, to know by sight that the characters occur under 12, 14, and 17 strokes respectively, is worth all the previous labor spent upon learning the primitives, in the time it saves.

Callery has given a score of pages containing sentences constructed out of the primitives, in order to assist in learning them. It will be worth more to the student to make and write sentences himself, out of the characters contained in the two preceding lists, and thereby familiarize himself with their use. The practice of repeatedly writing the characters, is the best way to imprint them on the memory; but it may be made more serviceable, by trying to form them into sentences. The proper manner of forming a character can best be learned by imitating a native as he writes, and it is the only way to produce well-shaped characters. It is not worth while to spend much time in using the Chinese pencil, for we are more familiar with the pen; and to make an accurate character is more important than to write an elegant one.

USES OF THE TWELVE HORARY CHARACTERS.

The application of the Twelve Branches to the hours of the day dates from before the time of the construction of the Sexagenary Cycle (B.C. 2637), and is ascribed to the Celestial Sovereign. They are also called Ti Chi 地支 Earthly Branches, and the animal which represents each branch is supposed to have great influence upon the destiny of the person born during the hour it rules; the Mongols, Coreans, Japanese, Siamese and Annamese apply these animals to the same signs; and the combination of the animal with the hours, and then with the zodiacal constellations, on through the points of compass, and the elements, all furnish the groundwork for the astrologer's skill and influence. To express European hours it is enough to prefix kiao 交 and ching 正 to the characters; thus, ching-tsz' 正子 is midnight, 交丑 is 1 o'clock A.M. and so throughout. Each Chinese hour is divided into eight k'oh 刻 of fifteen minutes each.

This is the only mode of reckoning years employed by the Chinese. Their records state that Nao the Great 大撓 was commanded by his sovereign Hwangti, in the 61st year of his reign, to examine the relations of the five elements, and form a cycle to name the years; he did so by taking kiah, the first of the ten stems, and joining it to tsz', the first of the twelve branches, to denote the first year of the cycle; the second characters of each series were then joined to form yueh-cheu, and so on, going through the ten stems six times, and the twelve branches five times, as shown in this table. This is supposed to have been in the year B. C. 2637, which according to Hales was 518 years after the deluge. The Chinese have never kept up a serial numbering of the cycles, but the 75th ended in 1863 with the 4500th year of their annals; there were 44 before the birth of Christ, ending A. D. 3; and there have been 31 cycles since that date, up to A. D. 1864. This mode of naming the years is followed by the Coreans, Japanese, and Lewchewans, and has done much to simplify and preserve their chronology.
